OCCUPATION of Addis Ababa and all of Ethiopia was the price demanded by Italy for an armistice in East Africa when the council of the League of Nations met again in Geneva. Baron Pompeo Aloisi presented the ultimatum on behalf of Dictator Mussolini. Wolde Mariam, representing Ethiopia, countered with a request that the league invoke all penalties against Italy under article 16 of the covenant, these including military sanctions as well as the economic penalties which the league has been trying to enforce. The British and French delegates explained the stand of their respective governments in the embroglio.

Baron Aloisi

The league was helpless, and having received the discouraging report of the conciliation committee, was compelled to confess it could not find means of attaining peace. France will not consent to the imposition of military sanctions, and Great Britain naturally will not undertake to enforce them by herself. It appeared the poor Ethiopians were to be abandoned to their fate, meaning the extinction of their empire and their exploitation by Italy.

The council adopted a resolution regretting its inability to end the war, reminding league members that they should continue the sanctions and asking Italy to be generous in bringing the conflict to a close.

Anthony Eden in his address to the council warned France that she might expect from Great Britain no further support against aggression by Germany than France had given against Italy.

From the north, south and west the Italian armies were advancing on Addis Ababa, and the panic stricken civilian inhabitants of the capital were fleeing from the city. Foreigners sought shelter in the bomb-proofed British legation. The mayor issued all the arms available and the government called on all able men to make a last stand for liberty, saying "it is better to die than to be enslaved."

Terrible Famine in Once Fertile China Province

DISPATCHES from Chengtu, China, tell a terrible story of the famine and drouth in Szechuen province, once one of the most fertile regions in the country. It is said to be the worst famine in the history of China, the deaths numbering many thousands and fully 30,000,000 persons being in distress. Suicides and "mercy slayings" are everyday incidents. The peasants are reduced to eating dogs, cats, rats and clay.

Officials said the situation primarily was a result of Communist incursions during the last two years in which the reds overran and pillaged the land.

British Budget Highest Since That of 1931

NEVILLE CHAMBERLAIN, chancellor of the exchequer, submitted to the British cabinet and later to parliament the annual budget, which is for almost four billion dollars, the highest since 1931. The huge rearmament program and other unusual expenses made it certain there will be no relief from present taxation burdens.

No estimate has yet been presented to parliament of the amount to be spent in 1936 on strengthening the fighting forces. All that is known is that the air force's part of the program will cost about $50,000,000 this year. Requirements of the army and navy may bring the aggregate for 1936 up to $110,000,000.

Turkey Remilitarizes Dardanelles Zone

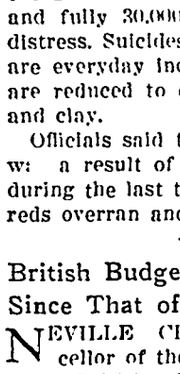
ANOTHER post-war treaty has gone flooey. President Kemal Ataturk of Turkey and his cabinet decided that the Dardanelles must be remilitarized, despite the Lusanne pact, and Turkish troops were promptly moved into the zone along the 75-mile long strait that connects the Sea of Marmora and the Aegean sea. It is believed Kemal will soon rebuild the fortifications in the zone which the allies failed to capture during the World war.



President Kemal

The Turkish dictator didn't surprise anyone by his action, for he asked permission of the League of Nations some time ago to rearm the Dardanelles. No formal reply had been made, but the British government rather favored giving consent, and the Soviet union openly approves Turkey's move. Italy was displeased, and there was considerable excitement in the Balkan states, especially Bulgaria which borders on European Turkey. The Bulgarians renewed their demand for a corridor giving them a direct route to the Aegean sea.

Probably Kemal's action will not be severely condemned by anyone, for most of the European nations are preparing for war with feverish haste. Austria's army, small but well equipped, held a spring parade in Vienna, and immediately the nations of the little entente displayed their anger at this show of military force and their military attaches in the Austrian capital were ordered not to occupy the places reserved for them among the reviewing officials. Rumania has increased its military budget to $38,000,000 and created a special fund of $20,000,000 for the development of aviation. Hungary is clamoring for revision of the Trianon treaty and recovery of the territory it lost to the little entente.

The forty-seventh birthday of Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler provided an opportunity for a big display of Germany's military power.

President's Secretary and Adviser Taken by Death

LOUIS McHENRY HOWE, secretary to President Roosevelt and for many years his close friend and adviser, died in the Naval hospital at Washington after an illness of more than a year. Mr. Howe was known in the capital as "the President maker," for it was largely due to his efforts that Mr. Roosevelt reached the White House. For twenty-five years, from the day when Mr. Roosevelt and he first met in Albany, he had devoted himself to forwarding his friend's political fortunes. During the Chicago convention and the ensuing campaign his planning and his advice were credited largely with the results attained.

Judge Ritter Is Found Guilty by Senate

FEDERAL JUDGE HALSTED L. RITTER of Florida was found guilty on impeachment charges by the senate and removed from office, being the fourth federal jurist to be ousted in this manner. On each of the first six articles of impeachment a majority of senators voted for his acquittal; but on the seventh article, which was a generalized summary of the charges against him, he was convicted by a vote of 56 to 28.

H. L. Ritter

An order declaring Ritter should be "forever disqualified from holding any office of honor, trust or profit under the United States" was defeated, 76 to 0.

The senate's verdict in the twelfth impeachment case brought before it as a high court of impeachment since foundation of the American republic amounted to a decision that Judge Ritter had violated the Constitutional requirements of good behavior in office.

Editors Condemn Seizure of Private Telegrams

RESOLUTIONS condemning the blanket seizure of private communications were adopted by the American Society of Newspaper Editors in convention at Washington.

"We are of the conviction," said the resolution, "that if such practice is not checked the threat to liberty of individual action and particularly to the freedom of the press is immediate and menacing."

The society urged its members to cooperate with all law enforcement agencies by guarding against the premature publication of information harmful to the successful completion of criminal investigations. The editors also inaugurated a formal study to determine if it is possible for the press and bar jointly to reach some working formula to prevent sensational murder cases from becoming public scandals.

PWA Power Loan Suit Goes to the Supreme Court

ASKING that the Supreme court review the lower court decision in the celebrated Buzzard Roost case, the Duke Power company and the Southern Public Utilities company carried up to the highest tribunal the question of whether the Public Works administration may finance publicly owned and operated hydro-electric plants to compete with private enterprise. Unless extraordinary measures are taken to speed the case, arguments cannot be heard until the term beginning next October. The government has 30 days in which to reply to the petition for review.

This case, which deeply concerns the New Deal program, arose when the PWA allocated $2,852,000 for construction by Greenwood county, South Carolina, of the Buzzard Roost plant on the Saluda river.

Respighi, Noted Italian Composer, Is Dead

OTTORINO RESPIGHI, one of the most famous of modern Italian composers, died in Rome at the age of fifty-six of heart disease following blood poisoning. His passing is cause for deep mourning among music lovers everywhere. Several of his operas were presented in New York and Chicago, and he was guest conductor of the Philharmonic Symphony orchestra of New York in 1932.

Results of the Illinois Primary Election

ILLINOIS' primary held the center of political interest for it not only provided lively state battles but also was of considerable moment nationally. Col. Frank Knox, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, and Senator Borah of Idaho, who was born in Illinois, were the contestants for the Republican Presidential preferential vote, and the former came out with 31 delegates against 26 for Borah. The senator's friends were elated because, without organization, he carried a large part of the state outside of Chicago. This preferential vote is purely advisory and neither man has a slate of delegates to the national convention. The result makes it certain that Knox will make a respectable showing on the first roll call. It also adds to Borah's prestige and aids him in the coming Ohio primary.

Frank Knox

Gov. Henry Horner, seeking renomination, was victorious in the bitter fight with the regular Democratic organization and the Kelly-Nash machine in Chicago, which had thrown him overboard and supported Bundesen for governor. The Democrats almost unanimously voted for the renomination of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, and the Republicans named Former Senator Otis Glenn to oppose him in November.

Republican leaders in Washington were encouraged to believe the internecine warfare in the Democratic ranks would help the Republicans to carry the state. The Democratic sages, on the other hand, liked the showing of strength made by Borah, feeling his liberal following might switch to Roosevelt in November.

In Nebraska's primary only Borah's name was printed on the Republican preferential ballot but almost one-sixth of the voters wrote in the name of Gov. Alf Landon of Kansas.

For the Democratic preference President Roosevelt was unopposed in both Illinois and Nebraska.

Flood Control Approved by the President

IN HIS press conference President Roosevelt said government departments are concentrating on flood control problems and that if congress would pass a bill appropriating a billion dollars for that purpose he would sign it, provided the measure put men to work immediately.

Mr. Roosevelt said the Passamaquoddy project in Maine and Florida ship canal were eliminated because of the recent refusal of congress to make appropriations for continuance of the work. He said he did not contemplate doling out relief funds for the projects and that there would be no funds for the projects unless congress reversed its refusal.

On the same day the United States Chamber of Commerce issued a warning against encroachment of the federal government on flood control projects which are the primary responsibility of the states.

President Lays Cornerstone for a Big Building

WITH appropriate ceremony the cornerstone of the new Interior department building in Washington was laid, the President handling the trowel. The structure, the second largest government office building there, is to be completed in December. It covers five and one-half acres and will provide 700,000 square feet of usable floor space. It will cost $12,000,000, about $5,000,000 less than the capital's largest, the Commerce department building.

The trowel used by Mr. Roosevelt was the one employed by George Washington in laying the cornerstone of the Capitol in 1793.

Draft of New Tax Bill Ready for Consideration

HAVING discarded the President's suggestion of temporary processing taxes, Chairman Sam B. Hill's house subcommittee completed its draft of the new tax bill. It calls for a new type of corporation levy, ranging from 1 per cent to 29.7 per cent for corporations with net income up to $10,000, and from 4 to 42½ per cent for corporations with net income over $10,000, depending on the amount of earnings that are not distributed. Preferential tax treatment is given to banks and insurance companies, to debt-ridden companies, to companies in receivership, and a new system of taxing non-resident aliens is created.

Big Pay for Lobby Committee Lawyer Is Refused

BY A vote of 153 to 137 the house rejected a resolution to permit Senator Black's lobby committee to pay $10,000 to special counsel in injunction litigation started by William Randolph Hearst to protect his telegrams from the probers. This action, which followed a bitter debate, doesn't halt the work of the committee, which has its own funds, but it prevents the payment of more than $3,000 a year, in accordance with general law, to Crampton Harris of Birmingham, Ala.

National Topics Interpreted

By WILLIAM BRUCKART

NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—I suggested in these columns a year or more ago that the campaign of 1936 would bring forth some of the most amazing oddities in political alignments that this country had ever known. It was apparent, even during the battle for ballots in 1932, that a gigantic shake-up in the voting alignment of citizens was in the making. These things are now being demonstrated and more proof of the changing times seems just around the corner.

Break in Party Lines

We all have seen how such outstanding figures as former Gov. Alfred E. Smith of New York, the Democratic Presidential nominee in 1928, have boldly flouted President Roosevelt and his New Deal theories and we have witnessed such vitriolic outbursts as those by former Senator James A. Reed, that old-line Missouri Democrat, and we have watched with interest the hauling and filling by Jeffersonian Democrats who find New Deal fantasies to be a bitter pill to swallow. Lately, there has come another most interesting situation respecting partisan alignment.

Although the action received much less attention than I believe it deserves, the determination of the Virginia Republicans in their recent convention at Roanoke to refrain from placing a Republican candidate in the field against Senator Carter Glass constitutes, to my mind, one of the most extraordinary twists ever to take place under our two party system. That convention, acting utterly without precedent, took the position that it was better to leave the field clear for the election of the veteran senator than to precipitate a political battle by naming a Republican candidate.

The reason for the action of the Virginia Republicans is quite clear in one way. They felt that Carter Glass, although a life-long Democrat who has carried on his share of bombardment of Republican principles and policies, could do the country more good from their standpoint than could be attained by placing a Republican condidate against him without chance of success. To state this premise in another way: Carter Glass does not swallow the New Deal as a whole and when he finds objectionable features in the Roosevelt program, he is independent enough and has the strength of character to voice his feelings. Doing this as a member of the majority party in the senate necessarily has more weight than all of the criticism of the New Deal that could be voiced by a Republican—if one could be elected in Virginia—and the Virginia convention chose a course which it believed would best serve the nation as a whole.

But it is the circumstance of a party convention refusing to engage in battle that interests me most. Under such circumstances, the old idea of party loyalty becomes not only illogical but ridiculous. Instead of a call to battle, we see what amounts to a call for support of a theoretical opponent. Of course, in the opinion of many, Carter Glass is the outstanding exponent of conservative thought in the Democratic party and if he speaks for conservative thought in the Democratic party he is almost speaking for conservative thought in the Republican party. It is easy to see, therefore, why the Virginia Republicans adopted the course they did but where does that leave party loyalty? What does it mean as to the future alignment of political thought?

On the Other Hand

The course followed by the Virginia Republicans is not more strange than the action of President Roosevelt himself who has indorsed Senator Hiram Johnson of California and Senator George Norris of Nebraska, with almost boyish enthusiasm. Senator Johnson and Senator Norris have not been regarded as regular Republicans but they have been flying the Republican banner for a good many years. Yet, the President verbally pats them on the back and offers his blessing.

During the same period, we have watched Mr. Roosevelt playing touch-and-go with the La Follettes in Wisconsin. Of course, the La Follettes catalogue themselves as Progressives but they never have had a great deal in common with old-line Democrats.

Likewise, in the senate if one is to believe gossip frequently bandied about, Senator McNary of Oregon, the titular Republican leader, has been only half-heartedly fighting the New Deal. In fact, some of Senator McNary's own colleagues claim that he has really given aid and comfort to their political enemies.

In the meantime, one can wander around the halls of congress and hear private observations from men who were supposed to be stalwart partisans that they have been unable to determine yet what their course ought to be. One of them remarked confidentially to me that he believed he would have to consult a clairvoyant before he could say whether he was going to support the New Deal or oppose it or try to straddle the fence. Of course, his remark was in a humorous vein but it epitomized the thought and, I may say, the worry of a very great many partisans at this time.

So, we have a picture six months ahead of the actual casting of the ballots in which party lines are torn asunder for countless hundreds of more or less important party figures. I think everyone agrees that the condition comes from the development of New Deal principles and policies under the leadership of President Roosevelt. There will be many who are now doubtful as to their course who will realign themselves with the New Deal because they were originally Democrats and there will be many who will again follow the Republican banner down the stretch. But it seems to me that three years of Roosevelt probably have established a greater segment of independent voting strength in this country than had resulted from a quarter of a century of partisan politics before. The situation must be construed then as indicating that hereafter those who stick definitely in party harness will continue to stand hitched because they have political aspirations and ambitions or because economic conditions in their communities are better fostered by the party with which they have aligned themselves. Beyond that, it seems to me, citizens, in most cases, will vote in increasing numbers for the man instead of the party.

'Quoddy Dream Dropped

At last, after almost two years of promotion work, President Roosevelt has abandoned two of his cherished dreams: harnessing the tides of Passamaquoddy bay in Maine and construction of a gigantic canal across Florida. The 'Quoddy project designed to produce electric power in quantities never before turned out, was to cost $40,000,000. The great job of excavating a slit across the face of the state of Florida to let ships go direct from the Atlantic to the Gulf without going around the toe of the state was to cost $150,000,000.

Only a small amount, that is, a small sum compared to other New Deal expenditures, had been wasted on the ship canal plans before it was tossed into the limbo of forgotten things, but something like $10,000,000 already has been used in the attempt to make the moon work through the medium of the tides of 'Quoddy bay. Both projects can be charged up to politics and experiments and probably the country will be better off to take the loss and avoid the use of further money.

The President fully intended to go through with his plans respecting these two projects until he ran into vicious opposition in congress. Too many representatives and senators realized that they were going to have the names 'Quoddy bay and Florida canal hurled at them through the coming campaign if they voted their approval by including additional funds for these projects in the relief appropriations. I don't know what is going to become of the homes, the model city, erected for workers near the 'Quoddy bay project. Photographs of this village indicate it to be a community of which any resident might be proud. It was constructed to assure the workers on the 'Quoddy project a comfortable place in which to live. They still have the comfortable place in which to live because the government still owns the homes but what is to become of those people and what disposition is to be made of the property is something else again. Thus, development of electric power from the tides of 'Quoddy bay has been an engineering question that has raged for years as a controversy. It has recurred frequently as a political matter but never until the New Deal came in were any tangible steps taken to install electrical equipment in that bay where the tides run higher than anywhere else in the world.

Faced Difficulties

Most engineers have contended that it was impossible to place in the bay equipment that could function satisfactorily while at the same time producing electric current at a rate that would bring a return on the tremendous investment necessary. Further than that, no one yet has been able to show where so much electric energy could be marketed. The territory is sparsely settled and the industrial production is small. While it was contended that limitless power would bring industries into that section, the indications were, even after actual work started, for only a small increment in the number of factories and other users of energy.

The 'Quoddy power idea probably was the most fascinating and most romantic of anything proposed by the New Deal for the purpose of creating jobs. Like the proposed Florida ship canal, it held potentialities but those whose opinions heretofore have been sound remain unconvinced that either the power plan or the canal for a short cut across Florida ever could repay the government for money spent there.

TOLERANCE GROWING

Most informed observers will agree that in recent years a growing spirit of religious tolerance has been manifested in the world especially in the United States. It is not unusual to find Protestant, Catholic and Jewish clergymen appearing on the same platform to aid in some worthy movement.

In recent months representatives of these three great bodies of religionists have united in mass meetings and elsewhere to protest against the persecution of Jews by the Hitler regime in Germany.

But an incident hitherto without precedent occurred in Cincinnati, when Rabbi James G. Heller of the Center Temple Jewish congregation of that city was elected a director of the Cincinnati and Hamilton County Y.M.C.A. A Jewish official of a Christian welfare society!

And why not? Rabbi Heller, according to the Cincinnati Times-Star, "has so identified himself with the community life of this city that it is quite impossible for any unprejudiced observer to compile a list of its cultural and religious leaders without including this distinguished rabbi among such leaders."

The Ohio Y.M.C.A. organization is to be congratulated on its religious tolerance and good common sense.

THEY CAN'T SPELL

It is reported that among 298 young men and women who took a civil service examination in New York recently all but three failed in spelling.

This is not surprising to those who have had occasion to observe the spelling of the average high school graduate or even that of some college men and women.

Why our schools do not give more attention to spelling is an unsolved mystery. Hundreds of hours are devoted to subjects which a pupil never thinks about after leaving school, yet the art of spelling, which must be practiced every day of his life is given scanty consideration.

Perhaps it is thought that everyone should be permitted to develop originality. If so the plan works well. Few show greater originality in any respect than in spelling.

TRAINING FOR THE JOB

Men and women don't become doctors by chance. They spend years of their lives getting the necessary knowledge. And then, after passing examination upon examination they are allowed o prescribe for mankind's physical ailments.

The construction of bridges is entrusted only to engineers who can erect bridges that won't collapse. Scientific advance is not achieved by novices playing with test tubes. In private business, the man at the top works himself there. He, too, has spent years studying for his job.

The average politician is just a man elected to office. No special knowledge is required of him.

In some quarters there are a minority who thoughtlessly recommend that we let government run all our businesses. Read what Matthew Woll, a vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, had to say about that in the magazine Annals of the American Academy:

Corporations are controlled by men. The machinery out of which corporations make their products and profits is controlled by men. One of the great issues of the future is going to revolve around this question: Which set of men shall exercise the judgment upon which control and regulatory measures shall be based? Shall it be the political or industrial set that will govern the operation of industry? Labor holds that the competence lies within industry and that politics and political methods may possess such competence only by chance."

We wouldn't let a politician remove our appendix or treat our heart. Is the average present-day complex business so simple that we can entrust it to just anybody? Or should we give the job to the man who is trained for it?

THOSE AAA PAYMENTS

Renters, sharecroppers and farm laborers who received little or nothing from the vast sums paid out by the AAA in so-called farmer benefits will be interested in the revelations being made regarding the enormous payments which went to big corporations.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace has been unwilling to make public the names of those receiving large amounts under the guise of "farm relief," but some of the facts have been dragged out. According to the National Tribune, Secretary Wallace admits the following among other large payments:

To a Hawaiian sugar concern, $1,022,037; to a Florida corporation for not growing sugar cane, $1,067,665; to a Puerto Rico sugar producer, $961,064.

One Mississippi concern, headed by Oscar Johnston, employed by the government as the AAA's cotton expert, was paid $177,947 for not growing cotton. The Mississippi penitentiary received $43,200 and the Arkansas penitentiary received $25,000 for not growing cotton.

A California company received the largest single payment for not growing wheat, $29,398, while a bank in the same state got $23,845 on the same grounds.

The largest corn-hog payment, $157,020, also went to a California corporation which fed its hogs mostly garbage instead of corn.

A California concern also received the largest payment for not growing rice, amounting to $63,768. A Florida company received the highest payment for not growing tobacco, $41,454.

The aristocrats of the relief grabbers, as is shown above, were big sugar companies, three of which averaged more than a million dollars each in AAA benefits. They are now probably figuring how to obtain an equal measure of "relief" from the operation of the new soil conservation law.

SPENDING AND SAVING

The problem of spending and saving is as old as civilization and in scarcely any phase of human conduct do we find greater differences among different persons. It is unfortunate that so few are able to strike a happy medium between stinginess and wastefulness.

The type of spendthrift who wastes inherited money is well known, as is also the lazy, shiftless type who lives from hand to mouth in good times or bad. The industrious worker who literally throws away his earnings is more rare.

An illustration of the latter class is seen in the late author and playwright, Edgar Wallace, who was one of the most prolific and successful writers of all time. In the 25 years before his death he wrote some 150 full length novels and literally thousands of short stories, besides 20 plays. So many of his works had big sales that his income must have been exceedingly large.

He was thought to be a wealthy man, but at his death his estate was found insufficient to pay his debts, and his wife was left without means of support. It seems incredible that a man of Wallace's intelligence and tireless energy should have been so short-sighted with respect to his financial affairs.

THE BALLOT OF DEATH

Four ballots in an urn, three white and one black. Four men to draw them out, the three drawing white ballots to go free, the one drawing the black ballot to die. Strangely enough, the first three to draw secured the white ballots, leaving the fourth to draw the fatal black slip.

This was the dramatic scene enacted at La Paz, Bolivia, and came about this way. Four men were convicted of the murder of former President Pando. Under the Bolivian law, only one person can be executed for a single murder, no matter how many may be implicated. So, to determine which of the four should pay the penalty, the drawing was held at the Palace of Justice.

Alfred Jauregi, 28, who had already spent 10 years in prison, was the unfortunate player in the lottery of death. He laughed when his fate was known and declared his innocence, but refused to ask for mercy. Guilty, or not, some admiration is due a man who can play such a grim game and lose with a smile.

Ab Jenkins, the famous driver, used Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires on his 3000-mile run over the Salt Beds of Utah which he covered in 25½ hours —a record of 12[illegible] per hour. He has driven more than a million miles on Firestone tires, every state in the union, on all kinds of [illegible] in all kinds of traffic, without tire failure or accident of any kind. What a tribute to safe, dependable, economical tire equipment.

When you drive at today's higher speeds, your life and the lives of others are largely dependent upon the degree of safety built into the tires of your car. Take no chances—equip your car with new Firestone High Speed Tires today and have the safest driving equipment money can buy.

End of cord from ordinary tire showing unprotected cotton fibers inside cord

The body of the New Firestone High Speed Tire is made from selected long-staple cotton dipped in liquid rubber, absorbing eight pounds of rubber in every hundred pounds of cotton. This patented Gum-Dipping process insulates every fiber in every cotton cord, preventing internal friction which creates the heat so destructive to tire life, and giving to the tire added strength.

This heavy, broad, traction and non-skid tread is held to the cord body of the tire with Two Extra Layers of Gum-Dipped Cords, a patented construction, making the cord body and tread an inseparable unit.

A leading [illegible] its in 2350 tests has found that the new scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up 25% quicker. Its sure traction non-skid efficiency have also been proved in the famous Pike's Peak Race where for eight consecutive years it has been used on winning cars.

Taxes Milk Public

Chicago—"Every time you or your children swallow a glass of milk you have to swallow a tax," writes B C Forbes, noted economic expert, in a newspaper here. "There are 53 taxes on your loaf of bread; taxes of $6.70 a year on your telephone more than $1 in taxes each month on your electric or gas meter."

Under the New Deal more than 20 cents out of every dollar goes for federal taxes, direct or indirect.

WPA Mural Placed in Asylum for Insane

Chicago.—Works Progress Administration artists have just completed a mural 44 feet long and 6 feet wide, at a cost of almost $2,000. Eighteen of the "boondoggling" painters were employed on the object of art, at salaries of $94 a month.

When the mural was completed it was placed where it is hoped it will be of interest and diversion to hundreds of art lovers—in the state asylum for the insane at Elgin, Ill.

Democratic Party Official Gets $90,000 in Salaries

Washington, D. C.—Walter J. Cummings, treasurer of the Democratic National committee, is being paid salaries and fees amounting to $90,000 a year, all from semi-public offices to which he was appointed by Jesse Jones, chairman of the Reconstruction Finance corporation, it was reported here

Cummings was formerly a Chicago manufacturer, but his business closed and is now in process of liquidation. When the New Deal came into power he was made executive assistant to the secretary of the treasury, and later chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance corporation. In 1934 Jones named him chairman of the board of directors of the Continental Illinois National bank (into which the RFC has put $50,000,000) at a salary of $60,000 a year, later raised to $75,000. Now Jones has named him as one of the three trustees of the Chicago, Milwaukee St. Paul & Pacific railroad (which has benefited to the extent of $11,499,462 of RFC money) at a salary of $15,000. The total of $90,000 is just $15,000 more than the salary of the President of the United States.

How WPA Brings Light to Youth of America

New York.—Students of the Stuyvesant high school, assembled for a presentation of a wholesome little skit called "School Days," as presented by actors of the WPA drama project here, found themselves suddenly whisked into the giddy whirl of Parisian night life, while faculty members murmured to themselves that "school was never like this for us."

Through a change in the cataloging of WPA plays, "School Days," known as Play 4A, was re-numbered 8A. Play 4A became "Parisian Nights," a spicy revue for presentation at vet-trans' hospitals and other places where the WPA felt it might be appreciated. When 4A was ordered for the high school, "Parisian Nights" instead of "School Days" was sent out. Its short skirts and pert little skits smacked unmistakably of the cheap burlesque show variety, but the actors, who are taking federal money to carry out orders to the letter, put on the revue, anyway

The WPA has appropriated $17,000,000 for the employment of actors, writers and musicians.

WPA Trains Poor Girls for Service to Wealthy

Washington, D. C.—Half a million New Deal dollars will be spent in teaching young women on relief to become servants in well-to-do homes, it was announced by the Works Progress administration here. Schools in the arts of dusting furniture and serving thumb in bowl of soup will be established in New York city, the District of Columbia, and in 21 states. Uniforms and $1 a week for carfare are being doled out to those enrolled.

The new project follows on the heels of a WPA project in Chicago which hired women to act as housekeepers for city housewives who were not feeling well enough to care for their homes and children.

Efficiency Called Stint to WPA's Lofty Ideals

Chicago.—An idea of the true meaning of "boondoggling" in its purest form at last came to light in a statement of George Melville Smith, supervisor of 229 artists working on a WPA project here, the largest number of artists ever to work together under one roof—except on another WPA project in New York.

The artists are painting 10,000 posters—all alike—on oil cloth. Stencils are being used for the lettering, but all posters are individually colored by hand. Asked why stencils weren't used for all operations, Smith said:

"Why, if we did that we'd be through in no time. We've got to keep the hands of all these people busy."

Taxes—America's Biggest Bill

Washington, D. C.—America's biggest bill is now taxes, Federal, state and local, which under the New Deal now amount to about $10,000,000,000 a year. This is an amount equal to almost half the gold in the world, and all the gold the United States owns, it was computed here. It is a bill greater than America's food, clothing or rent bills.

Price of Executive "Ability"

Washington, D. C.—The resettlement administration, under Rexford Guy Tugwell, No. 1 Brain Truster of the New Deal, so far has used up $11,629,606 to administer the spending of $21,056,753 on rural rehabilitation and relief. In other words, every time $2 is spent its costs more than $1 to determine where it should go.

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Gibbs, of Mason City, spent the week end visiting at the home of Miss Anna Gibbs.

Rev. Calvin Groeschuesch returned Friday from LaCrosse, Wisconsin where he attended a conference of Reformed Church officials.

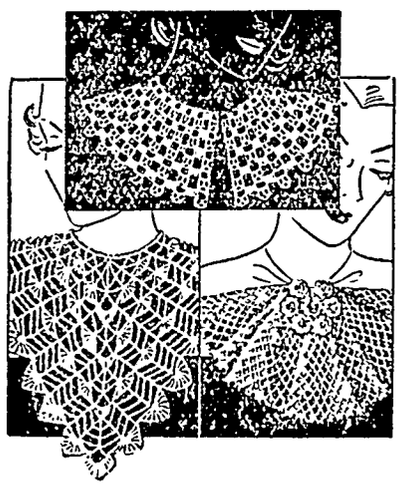
Dainty Crocheted Collars and Jabots That Win Recognition for Any Dress



Pattern 1136

High time to be thinking up fresh accessory notes for spring wardrobe, isn't it? Then what better than these airy, lacy collars and dainty jabot for giving last year's frock a "lift" and changing this year's so it wins recognition! There's an open front collar in a square mesh design, a triangular collar that closes in back, both easy to do in petite boucle. The soft, flattering jabot of mesh with "nosegay" of Irish roses is made in cotton.

Pattern 1136 comes to you with detailed directions for making the collars shown; an illustration of them and of all the stitches needed; material requirements.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Taxis Replace Old Gharries as Vehicles in Holy City

The last of Jerusalem's famous fleet of ramshackle open horse drawn cabs has been relegated to the junk heap.

In their place modern taxicabs will convey the citizens of Jerusalem and visitors up and down the precipitous slopes of the Holy City.

Practically every visitor to Jerusalem used to take at least one drive in one of these horse cabs, or "gharries." They seemed as typically a part of the Jerusalem scene as gondolas in Venice or rickshas in Shanghai.

Unfortunately for the cab drivers, however, the steep city streets recently were asphalted for the benefit of automobile traffic. As a result the cab horses continually slipped and fell. The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals intervened and made representations to the government resulting in the withdrawal of horse drawn cabs from the streets.

INVENTS NEW STOVE THAT MAKES OWN GAS

W. C. Coleman, Noted Inventor Makes It Possible for Every Home Everywhere to Enjoy Modern Gas Cooking Service at Low Cost

Housewives everywhere are enthusiastic in their praise of a new stove that makes its own gas and brings modern gas cooking service at low cost to homes anywhere. W. C. Coleman, noted inventor and pioneer manufacturer of gas-pressure appliances, regards this stove as his crowning achievement.

W. C. COLEMAN

The new Coleman Range makes its own gas from ordinary lead-free gasoline. Lights instantly, like gas. The flame from its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners is hotter than natural gas and is easily adjusted for fast cooking or slow simmering. Its low fuel consumption makes it cheaper to use than coal, wood or kerosene.

The Coleman Range has a spacious insulated oven and drawer-type broiler. An independently controlled burner provides any heat desired for baking or broiling.

Climaxing his achievement, Mr. Coleman endowed the Coleman Safety Range with gracious beauty, style and color.

Persons wishing full information about these marvelous new Coleman Ranges, will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-238, Wichita, Kansas—Adv.

FLOYD GIBBONS Adventurers' Club

Hello, Everybody!

"The Pit"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU know, boys and girls, it isn't at all unusual for an adventurer to run into an experience that leaves him dazed and barely able to stagger along home, but Harry Goldin of Bronx, N. Y., is one up on all those guys. Harry was dazed and barely able to stagger before his adventure started. After it was all over he was a lot worse off.

It all happened in April, 1899, when Harry was down in Cuba fighting the Spanish-American war for Uncle Sam. He was with the Seventh Regiment cavalry, stationed in the field outside Pinal del Rio, and things had quieted down to such an extent that troopers with a good record could get a pass from the officer of the day to go into town, make a few purchases, and have what was widely known as a good time.

Harry was one of the troopers who had a good record. I don't know how he managed to get it, and I know doggone well he didn't deserve it, because the first thing he did when he hit town—he and his buddy—was to head for a saloon.

They had a couple bottles of beer, and then they drank some Cuban white mule. They ambled around the town taking in the sights, but to judge by Harry's and his pal's actions, most of those sights were in the bottom of a glass.

A. W. O. L. Is Bad Business in Any Man's Army.

Finally it got to the point where they had to do their sightseeing sitting down, because whenever they got up on their feet the sights reeled and wabbled around so fast that they couldn't get a good look at them.

That went on until it became just plain impossible to see a sight or anything else. Then all of a sudden it dawned on them that it was dark—that they had overstayed their leave—and that they had better get the heck out of town before the corporal of the guard came looking for them. They lurched to their feet and started walking toward the camp in three directions at once.

By the time they were half way there it was twice as dark as when they had started. They couldn't see a foot ahead of them and were even having some trouble trying to keep a foot under them. How the two lads got separated, Harry doesn't know. He was walking along talking when all of a sudden he realized he was talking to himself. He yelled for his pal, but he got no answer. On top of that it started to thunder and lightning—and then to rain.

Harry went on alone. Every once in a while a flash of lightning would illuminate the sky, and then he could see where he was going. The third or fourth flash showed a dark object up ahead. That, Harry thought, would be his buddy. He gave a whoop and started toward it. Through the dark he could see it coming to meet him. Just as it reached him Harry stumbled and fell.

Harry's Pal Turned Out to Be a Big Black Bear.

He reached out and grabbed hold of his pal, to help himself up again. His pal had grown a thick coat of heavy fur in the meantime, but Harry had had too many tequilas and aguardientes back in town to notice that. Again he stumbled, clutched his pal for support, and both of them tumbled into a deep pit.

It was the sort of a pit they use for garbage in Cuba. Something told Harry that, even though he couldn't see. The fall jarred some of the sense back into him, and, for the first time he began to wonder how his pal had happened to grow that coat of fur. He didn't have to wonder long. A sudden flash of lightning lit up the pit. That furry thing wasn't his buddy at all. It was a boar—a huge, black, snarling bear!

For a minute Harry thought he was pipe-dreaming the whole thing. That bear must have come right out of one of those aguardiente bottles back in town. But no. The bear was on him now—had him down—was mauling him like the devil. He couldn't dream those sharp stabs of pain—couldn't dream the bruises the bear gave him as he kicked him around.

Harry Learns That Bears Don't Fight Fair.

The bear didn't fight fair. It was the darndest animal Harry ever saw. It was jumping on him. Harry could feel it. Bam! And the brute would land on him. Off he'd go. And, then, Bam! He'd land on him again. What kind of a bear was this that fought like a moose?

Another flash of lightning told the story. Harry looked up just in time to see the bear pawing and clawing at the top of the pit. Then, Bam! He lost his hold and landed on Harry again.

That animal wasn't jumping on him. He was falling on him. He was using Harry for a springboard, trying to get out of the pit. That's about the last thing Harry remembers. Then, Bam! again, and he lost consciousness.

The next thing Harry knew he woke up in the hospital. His friends were all standing around his cot. He thought they'd come to be with him at the end—until he noticed that they were all laughing.

The Laugh Was on Harry, Even if It Hurt.

"And when they told me about it," Harry says, "I had to laugh myself. The bear was one that had escaped from a small circus and had wandered out of town. It was just about twice as scared as I was."

But Harry's laugh didn't last long. When he tried to move in his cot his grin faded away. He was scratched from head to foot and had three broken ribs where the bear fell on him. If you want to make him mad now, just ask him about the time he did a Sidney Franklin with old Bruin amid the rose petals and incense of that refuse pit way down there in Cuba in '99.

Bats Nurse Their Young Like Most Other Animals

Bats aren't blind, as the stories go, but they are so fond of darkness that they never venture out into daylight unless they're forced to by some intruder, and then just long enough to find another quiet, dark place. Then at dusk they stretch their wings and begin to take an interest in life. And even when it's pitch dark they know how to dodge things when they're flying. Their eyes are small, but they probably have such keen ears and noses that they're quite well off without bigger eyes. Scientists haven't determined which of their senses is sharpest, says a writer in the Washington Star.

Although bats fly like insects and birds, they do not lay eggs and hatch them as insects and birds do. Instead they nurse their young like monkeys or cows or squirrels, and so they belong to the mammal family.

The body of a bat looks much like that of a mouse, and its wings are very different from those of a bird. A bat's wing is made of skin stretched over long toes. And insect-eating bats have a long tail that helps to support the wings.

But the big fruit bats, which live in the tropics and whose wing spread is often two feet, are without tails, so the skin of their wings is stretched from the front to the hind foot. The long, slender toes of the front foot spread out like a fan and support most of this immense wing. Only the thumb is left free, so that it can clutch at branches.

It is with their hind feet that bats hang, heads down, for their long daytime naps.

Beauty and Power in Trees

A tree's every detail in leaf-shape and arrangement, in habit of branching, and in the character of the tissues is so contrived as to resist the enormous stresses and strains that are at work. Notice a tree in full leaf exposed to a strong westerly gale. Every thing is in movement bending and swaying backwards and forwards. A great strain is thrown on the roots which will be at one moment but tresses and the next acting as taut cables resisting the pull of the return sway.

Movie • Radio

★★★By VIRGINIA VALE★★★

EVERYONE who sees Harriet Hilliard in "Follow the Fleet" or hears her sing on the radio with Ozzie Nelson's band ought to meet her as well; she's decidedly worth meeting. To begin with, she is much prettier in real life than in pictures. And to see her as the demure music teacher who, as Ginger Rogers' sister, falls in love with Randolph Scott, gives you no idea whatever of what sort of girl she is. She is magnetic, delightful, charming. And she is one of the few girls who have had a career thrust upon them.

She never did want to go on the stage, but she had to earn her living. And when she was very young her mother pointed out to her the fact that it's better to train for a profession that pays well than for one that never will bring in much money. "Better a dancer at one hundred a week than a stenographer at fifteen," said Mama, or words to that effect. So Harriet became a dancer. She appeared at one of Broadway's big movie houses, and on the road in musical shows. And she worked so hard that, at nineteen, she had to stop.

"If you want to get ahead in Hollywood nowadays, it's better not to be too good looking," remarked a fan magazine editor the other day. She has been meeting movie stars for some fifteen years now, and knows what she is talking about. "Hepburn isn't beautiful," said she. "Neither is Doris Dudley, RKO'S newest discovery. But they both have talent. Hollywood is too full of beauties who've been signed up for a few months, and more beauties who came out here hoping for the best, and finished as waitresses."

Will Hays, president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America (what a title!) has decided that one week in May will be Memorial week for Will Rogers; during that week the Will Rogers Memorial at Saranac Lake will be dedicated. But Will Rogers did so many things that will make people remember him that he needs no other memorial. For example, he put his old friend, Fred Stone, into pictures; Fred is now established as a screen star, thanks to his work in "Alice Adams" almost a year ago. He also put another old friend, Irvin Cobb, on the screen. You've known of Cobb as a humorous writer, of course. For years he has been one of our most successful authors.

For a long time it has been Ruby Keeler's ambition to be a great woman golfer; being a good actress and a marvelous dancer meant little.

She's been playing golf for some time, and recently she went into the Southern California women's tournament, won three matches, and was put out in the last round. Looks as if she might achieve that ambition after all.

Did you hear the recent broadcast of Paul Whiteman's birthday celebration? Of course, it came at a bad hour—one-thirty in the morning, Eastern Standard time; NBC kept its line open after midnight for it. The Paul Whiteman alumni staged it—and what a list of well-known people once worked for Paul! Morton Downey, Bing Crosby, Jane Froman, Ferde Grofe and George Gershwin, the composers, and Mary Margaret McBride, whom you may have heard on the air as Martha Dean.

And, speaking of Morton Downey, he's sailing in May to keep concert engagements in England and Ireland—and how he loves to go to Ireland!

Here's a funny check-up on the popularity of radio programs. In London they've found that during a really big broadcast the consumption of water drops 85 per cent.

Longer Life Is Hope From Study of Age, Scientists Hold

Cells of Aged Animals Found to Grow Rapidly

MILLIONS are alive today who, if they had been born a generation or two ago, would have fallen victims to smallpox, diphtheria or one of the other great killers of former times. The disease fighters of modern medical science learned to conquer these plagues, only to be confronted with other disease enemies of an entirely different sort—cancer, heart and kidney disease.

Diseases of the heart and blood vessels which today take first place as cause of death are due not so much to "germs" and poisons as to the process of growing old.

At Columbia university the problem is being attacked by a study of the aging process itself. An important first step was taken when one of the Columbia investigators, Dr. Henry S. Simms, found that the body cells of aging animals will grow outside the body in what are called tissue cultures just as readily as cells from the bodies of very young animals.

Study Aging Process.

While the cells of aged animals will grow as readily, however, another Columbia scientist found that some of these aged cells do not function as well. It seems to depend on which organs of the body the cells came from. This seems to parallel the fact that some organs of the body, the heart, for instance, wear out and are unable to keep going or functioning normally earlier than other organs.

The cells from the lymph glands and the liver showed the greatest decrease in functional activity.

Long Time Required.

"Just how much significance is to be attached to these observations is not known at present," Dr. James W. Jobling, professor of pathology at Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons, said in describing the studies of aged tissues.

"But we hope to expand and continue this phase of the work, for it is possible that here we may find some clew to the answers we are seeking. Studies are also being conducted on cancer and arteriosclerosis."

Billion Dollar Loss From Rust Faces U. S. Every Year

NEW YORK.—There is much alarming comment these days on the size of the public debt. It costs about a billion dollars a year merely to pay the interest on this loan.

Few people, however, feel vitally concerned about the money lost due to the rusting of their property.

Dr. R. M. Burns of the Bell Telephone laboratories here points out, however, that this loss due to rust is approximately as large as the interest on the public debt.

One of the most widely used rust preventives is paint, and 120,000,000 gallons are used annually; one gallon for every person in the country.

How Metals Corrode.

In an article in the Bell System Technical Journal, Doctor Burns describes the various processes which occur when metals corrode. What finally happens is, of course, that the metal goes into chemical combination with something else and is rendered useless.

It may seem a far cry from a rusty nail to the battery in a flashlight. But actually the formation of rust on the nail is, to a large extent, a result of the action of thousands of tiny electric batteries on the surface of the iron.

Most school boys know that a battery can be made of an iron rod and a copper rod dipped into a solution of some salt or acid. If he has tried it he knows also that, as the battery is used, the iron is gradually destroyed.

The same process occurs on the surface of the metal. The metal itself and some speck of impurity on its surface are "immersed" so to speak, in a film of moisture taken from the air. The metal and the pieces of impurity are, of course, in electrical contact so that the microscopic batteries run continually and the iron is slowly but surely eaten up.

Invisible Fish Line New Threat to Trout

WASHINGTON. — Fishermen and amateur anglers stand to benefit from the latest event in the life of tungsten, the metal which replaced carbon filaments in electric light bulbs.

Christian Dantsizen, Schenectady, N. Y., inventor, has just been awarded a U. S. patent here which describes the use of tungsten wire, as fine as human hair, in fishing tackle. He claims it will be of great value in fishing because it is apparently invisible to fish, especially trout.

And that his is not another "fish" story is indicated by the fact that General Electric company, which uses miles and miles of tungsten wire in light bulbs, has taken over his patent

POULTRY FACTS

WATCH STANDARDS OF COD LIVER OIL

Potency for Rats Does Not Apply to Chickens.

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture.—WNU Service.

Any source of vitamin D that is to be included in mixed feeds intended for poultry should be purchased on the basis of its guaranteed potency for chickens instead of rats. The potency of commercial sources of vitamin D is customarily measured by tests made with rats which do not react to the different sources of this vitamin as do chickens.

The poultryman may obtain vitamin D from cod-liver oil, sardine oil, other fish-liver and fish oils, and irradiated products. In the case of cod-liver oil, new standards have been adopted, and if it is to be sold as such it must now contain at least 85 international vitamin D units and at least 600 international vitamin A units per gram. Any cod-liver oil that does not meet these requirements must be labeled "cod liver oil, not U. S. P." The designation "Poultry U. S. P." has been used recently, but it is misleading and its use is not official.

Until some satisfactory chicken unit of vitamin D potency has been established, cod-liver oil may be purchased on the basis of the number of international vitamin D units it contains per gram. All other sources of vitamin D should be purchased on the basis of the minimum quantity, expressed as per cent of the feed, required to protect young growing chicks against rickets.

"Although the official method of stating vitamin D potency is to give the number of international units per gram, some carriers of cod-liver oil are still marked with the number of units per ounce, and often the unit meant is not the international unit. The purchaser should remember that all units of vitamin D potency are not equal and that an ounce is more than 28 times as heavy as a gram."

Sour Skim Milk Good Beverage for Chicks

Sour skim milk is an excellent beverage for baby chicks, according to Dr. W. C. Thompson, professor of poultry husbandry at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers university. It increases their appetites and is a readily digestible and highly nutritious food in itself, he says.

The rate of growth is stimulated by feeding sour skim milk to chicks during the first six weeks, and the beverage also acts as a regulator of the birds' digestive systems, Doctor Thompson points out. Commercial poultrymen are using this food in increasing quantity lately because it helps to produce good broilers quickly and aids in getting young pullets properly started.

Fresh milk may easily be made sour by using a small amount of sour milk as a starter and adding fresh milk to it each morning. If this is set in a warm room, the souring process will take place rapidly.

Feed the sour milk in a thickened condition, but first break the clabber by stirring so that the whey as well as the solids will be consumed. Baby chicks may be started on sour milk during their first day in the brooder and need be fed no water during the entire six weeks, provided there is plenty of the milk on hand. This forces all the chicks to get the sour milk consuming habit.

When feeding sour milk to chicks, it is advisable to use earthenware or enamelware containers instead of metal receptacles, as the lactic acid in the sour milk may have a chemical reaction on the metal.

Poultry Cullings

If the turkey is to be dry picked, the work should be begun immediately while the feathers are loosened.

It costs approximately 80 eggs a year to feed a hen, whether it is a good layer or a poor one.

Farm flock records show that those who brood early chicks make more profit from their flocks than those who brood late chicks.

Lighting will help to hasten the moult of old birds, and get them back into laying condition quickly.

Shatterings of alfalfa (largely leaves and the finest stems) that accumulate under hay drops and in front of the mangers, are excellent feed.

See that the birds get plenty of sunshine, and do not keep breeders in service too long. The older the birds, after the first year or two, the lower is the quality and fertility of their eggs.

Geese represent about one-half of one per cent of all poultry raised in this country, reports Oklahoma A. and M. college.

Considerable loss in breakage of eggs in shipment can be avoided if attention is given to the production of eggs with strong shells.

New Hampshire Reds have made a very enviable reputation for themselves. It is hardly believable when you hear of the marvelous results many poultry raisers have had.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Wood ashes make an excellent fertilizer for shrubbery and rose bushes, also for dahlias, peonies and delphinium. Scatter ashes over soil. It makes it sweet and has a tendency to loosen it.

A simple Russian dressing is made by adding two tablespoons of chili sauce and two tablespoons of finely chopped green peppers to one cup of mayonnaise.

Purchase seldom used spices in small packages, as it is more economical since spices lose some of their flavor when exposed to the air.

Sweep rugs the way of the pile. Brushing against the grain tends to brush dust in instead of out.

Powdered borax added to the water when washing fine white flannels helps to keep them soft.

The tough skin that forms on top of a cornstarch pudding may be prevented if a piece of oiled paper is placed over pudding when set away to cool.

If the table silver is placed in hot soapsuds immediately after being used, and dried with a soft, clean cloth, much of the work of polishing will be saved.

When you are basting roast beef, a tablespoon of brown or white sugar added to the gravy improves the flavor and color.

Paint stains that are dry and old may be removed from cotton or wool en goods with chloroform. First cover amply with olive oil.

Paper baking cups make excellent caps for milk bottles. Press edges down firmly to fit mouth of bottle.

Oldest Temple-Fort Found by Explorers in the Orient

A prehistoric architect's conception of a combined citadel and temple of worship, antedating by nearly three centuries the earliest biblical reference to temple fortresses, has been uncovered by archeologists at Tepe Gawra, in northern Mesopotamia, it was announced at the University of Pennsylvania. The discovery and excavation of the massive walled "round house," a circular building of sun brick unique among all prehistoric finds, climaxed the seventh season of work at the "Great Mound" 15 miles northeast of Mosul by a joint expedition of the university museum and the American Schools of Oriental Research.

J. C. ROBINSON, MASON CITY SEEKS SEAT IN SENATE

Mason City Attorney Is Candidate For Office In Iowa Legislature

The candidacy of J. C. Robinson, Mason City attorney, for the republican nomination for state senator from the forty-third senatorial district comprised of Cerro Gordo, Hancock and Franklin counties was announced Friday

Mr. Robinson consented to enter the campaign as a candidate at the urgent advice of friends in this and other counties

A resident of Mason City since 1902, Mr Robinson has played an important role in the public life of the community Two years after coming to the city he was appointed city attorney, which position he held until 1908 when he resigned to become county attorney He held the county attorney's office for three terms to the close of 1914.

Mr Robinson was again appointed city attorney in 1918 and served in that capacity under three administrations to 1924

Mr Robinson has been active in the party councils of the county and was chairman of the republican county central committee for several years in the early nineteen twenties He also served as president of the Cerro Gordo Bar association —Globe Gazette

Mr. Robinson was in Klemme last Wednesday calling on a number of Republicans, and The Times acknowledges a pleasant visit Mr Robinson is a fine gentleman to meet, has a large following and is well qualified for the office.

His official announcement appears elsewhere in this issue of the Times.

Mother

—o o—

Someone I love comes back to me
With every gentle face I see;
Beneath each wave of soft, gray hair
I seem to see my mother there.
With every kindly grace and word
It seems as if I must have heard
Her speak, and felt her tender gaze
With all the love of olden days.
And I am moved to take her hand
And tell her now I understand
How tired she grew beneath the strain
Of feeling every loved one's pain.
No further burdens could she bear;
The promise of that land more fair
Alone could tempt her from her child;
And now, if I could keep her here,
No sacrifice would be too dear.
No tempered winds for her too mild.
Then I would smooth and kiss her face,
And by her side take my old place,
And sob my cares and fears away,
The tears I have so long repressed
Would lose their ache upon her breast.
I think if I could feel her touch
Once more, it would not matter much
Hw sunny or how dark the day.

The Times Has Newest Design Of Type Style In Use This Week

READABILITY MAIN FEATURE OF LATEST NEWS TYPE

Linotype Company Develops New Type Face Very Easy To Read

The Klemme Times has gone to quite an expense to improve the appearance of the paper by getting a new set of mats for the linotype machine and to be used in setting the bulk of news matter

The Linotype Company have spent several years in research to develop a type face that had a high degree of readability under all conditions. The new type we are using is the very latest news type brought out.

To give our readers a comparison we have taken "Ordinance No 34" printed in the Times last week. Then we have set the identical type matter in our new type in the column opposite. Thus you can compare our former news type with the newest face.

(The Old News Type)

ORDINANCE NO. 34

MRS. EMMA PALMER WRITES NICE LETTER

The Times is in receipt of a fine letter from Mrs. Emma Palmer of Glenadle, California, send her subscription for the Times. We quote part of her letter telling about the Easter service there:

"Easter was a lovely day. Rita and I got up at four o'clock and went to the sunrise service at Forest Lawn, the beautiful cemetery here in Glendale. There is a high hill on which is a tower (called the "Tower of Legends") and on top of the hill is where they always have the sunrise service.

"I couldn't hear much of it, but I could see and there was certainly a lot to see. When we got there it was dark except for the moon and that was on the wane, but we could see thousands of lights in all directions for miles around; just that was worth the effort of getting up early There was an orchestra from Los Angeles which played three selections, and then the choirs from all the churches combined for the singing. They sat on the steps of the tower and were seated so that those dressed in white formed a large white cross. The service started just as the sun arose from the east; the Episcopal bishop from L. A. giving the Easter address. There were 35 thousand people there.

"On our way home we stopped to see the famous window in the museum "The Last Supper." The window is beyond description; one could stand and look for a lnog time. There were several windows and many statues, the place being so beautiful it almost takes your breath away."

KLEMME TEACHER SECRETLY MARRIED LAST AUGUST

Miss Georga Ford, Eighth Grade Teacher, Weds Arcadia Man

At a party given Monday evening, Miss Georga Ford, seventh and eighth grade teacher here for the past seven years, announced her marriage last August 20th at St. Joseph, Missouri, to Mr John Muenchow, of Arcadia, Iowa.

At the party Mrs Muenchow had arranged white nut cups with silver rimmed handles which concealed a small roll of paper announcing the marriage The announcement came as a complete surprise to everyone in Klemme.

The marriage of Mr. and Mrs Muenchow has also been kept a secret at Redfield, home of the bride, and at Arcadia, where Mr. Muenchow is in business. He is a mechanic and electric welder.

Mrs. Muenchow has been an excellent teacher and has made a fine record in the Klemme Schools Through her efforts the Klemme School has made great progress in music and she has developed a fine school orchestra and special instrumental groups.

Mr. and Mrs Muenchow will set up housekeeping at Arcadia soon after school is dismissed for the summer vacation.

The Times joins with the many friends of the former Miss Ford in extending congratulations and best wishes.

Taken To South Dakota; Old Home

FATHER OF MRS. CALVIN GROSSHUESCH DIED HERE ON SATURDAY MORNING

Body Taken To Menno, S. Dak. Monday For Burial

Mr G. H Kuhlman, 74 years of age, died Saturday morning, May 2nd, at 8·00 o'clock at the home of his daughter in Klemme, Mrs. Calvin Grosshuesch. For the past several months, Mr Kuhlman had made his home in Klemme with his daughter. A few weeks ago Mr. Kuhlman became ill and since that time grew gradually worse until death claimed him.

The writer knew Mr. Kuhlman as a very pleasant man. He always had a jolly word for everyone and he seemed always to be happy and was content with his lot in life While Mr. Kuhlman resided in Klemme and prior to that time when occasionally he would come here on a short visit, he made a great many friends in the community.

Herhardt Henry Kuhlman was born at Guttenberg, Iowa, on November 9, 1861. His father, Henry Kuhlman, was serving as a soldier in the Union Army when Mr. Kuhlman was born He was confirmed in the Catholic church. After his father had returned from service in the Civil War the family moved to Le Mars, Iowa, where they resided for a few years and then moved to Clayton, South Dakota.

As a youth, Mr. Kuhlman was mechanically inclined and eagerly learned the blacksmith trade, and so apt was he at this work that he launched into business for himself at the age of nineteen when he purchased and operated a shop at Menno, South Dakota. His brother joined with him in the work and together they labored for 35 years.

Shortly after his marriage Mr. Kuhlman became affiliated with the Reformed Church and since had been a loyal and faithful member and took an active part in the church affairs whenever called on.

On November 2, 1884 Mr. Kuhlman was united in marriage with Miss Clementine Jaton, and to this union were born seven children. Three children died in infancy. Mrs Kuhlman preceded him in death on September 7, 1932.

Due to an injury to his wrist Mr Kuhlman gave up his profession 13 years ago and retired from business, and lived with his family at Menno, spending enjoyable years after having labored such a long time

He leaves to mourn his death, his four children· Edward of Menno, South Dakota: Mrs Calvin Grosshuesch, Klemme, Iowa· Herman of Santa Monica California: and Mrs Floyd Burnham of Parkston, South Dakota· also three brothers, four sisters and five grandchildren His grandchildren, the Grosshuesch children, all live in Klemme

A devotional service was conducted by Rev Wm Huenemann at the Grosshuesch home Sunday afternoon The remains were taken to Menno Monday where funeral services were conducted today (Wednesday) at the Menno Reformed Church

Plans Completed for the Democratic Convention

SENATOR ALBEN W. BARKLEY of Kentucky, who was temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention in 1932 and as such delivered the keynote speech, will serve in the same capacity at the Philadelphia convention in June, outlining the issues of this year's campaign as his party views them. Senator Joseph T. Robinson of Arkansas will be the permanent chairman again. Yet another repeater will be Former Judge John E. Mack of New York. Four years ago he placed Franklin D. Roosevelt in nomination, and he will do it again in June.

Sen. Barkley

These selections were made by the committee on arrangements. Other officers of the convention chosen, are: Lee Barnes of Alabama, chief doorkeeper; Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, national committeewoman of the District of Columbia, hostess of the convention, with Mrs. Agnes Collins Dunn of New Hampshire as assistant; Col. Edward C. Halsey, secretary of the senate, sergeant at arms; Representative Clarence Cannon of Missouri, parliamentarian, assisted by Representative John J. O'Connor of New York; W. Forbes Morgan, secretary of the convention.

National Chairman Farley said that the two-thirds rule, which has prevailed in Democratic conventions for a century, will not be abolished. The rules committee will be headed by Senator Bennett Clark of Missouri and it will report for abrogation of the two-thirds rule as well as elimination of the unit rule. The latter binds the state delegations to abide by the decision of a majority of the delegation. According to Mr. Farley, these changes will not prevent the practically unanimous nomination of President Roosevelt.

Present plans are to have Mr. Roosevelt go to Philadelphia on Saturday, June 27, to close the convention by accepting the nomination in a speech delivered either in the Municipal stadium or in the University of Pennsylvania stadium close to the convention hall.

Roosevelt Addresses National Democratic Club

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT made what might be considered the first of his campaign speeches before the National Democratic club in New York city. Tammany was there in full force, but such disgruntled Democrats as Al Smith and John J. Raskob were conspicuous by their absence. Mr. Roosevelt declared his purpose to bring more food, higher prices and better homes for the people.

"If you increase buying power," he said, "prices will go up; more goods will be sold. Wages ought to and must go up with prices. This does not mean unsound inflation or skyrocketing prices; this should be avoided just as we seek to avoid bankruptcy sale values."

Turning to his critics with sarcasm, the President said "some individuals are never satisfied." Referring to charges of extravagance and mounting deficits, he said people complain to him about "the current costs of rebuilding America, about the burden on future America." He insisted that the measure should not be the three-billion-dollar deficit of this year but the assertion that the national income has risen thirty-five billions in 1932 to sixty-five billions in 1936.

New Tax Bill Battle Started in House

THE administration's bill to levy about 800 million dollars in new taxes yearly was introduced in the house by the ways and means committee, and a fierce battle started immediately. The Republican minority of the committee issued a report which stated that the proposed tax law was "unsound in principle, will undermine business stability, is another step toward regimentation of all business, and is not designed to raise revenue but admittedly is another New Deal experiment."

Conservative Democrats joined with the Republicans in this attack against the bill, but the administration leaders were confident the measure would pass before May 1.

Green Urges Unions to Remain Nonpartisan

WILLIAM GREEN, president of the American Federation of Labor, has sent a letter to all affiliated unions urging that they adhere to the federation's "traditional nonpartisan political policy." He says:

"For obvious reasons, labor should avoid division even in the pursuit of its political policies. Such division can be avoided if working men and women, loyal to the American Federation of Labor, will refrain from identifying themselves with any political movement designed to serve as a substitute for the nonpartisan political policy of the American Federation of Labor."

Some time ago George L. Berry asked all unions to join "Labor's Nonpartisan league," the object of which, he said, was "to put American Federation of Labor unions on the record for President Roosevelt."

Navy in Six-Week Drill on the Pacific

ONE hundred and fifty vessels of the United States fleet, with 450 airplanes, are now engaged in the year's grand maneuvers in the Pacific War conditions prevail and the vessels and their crews are being given a severe test of their fitness that will last for six weeks. The Panama canal region was the first objective of the fleet. The units are divided into attacking and defending forces and something is doing all the time, day and night. The naval officers are trying to solve the seventeenth of a series of strategic problems, each based upon some possible international situation, mapped out by naval strategists.

Von Starhemberg of Austria Voices His Defiance

CIVIL war in Austria became a possibility as the quarrel between the Fascists led by Prince Ernst von Starhemberg and the clerical and monarchist elements became acute. Government officials, however, were trying desperately to patch up the trouble.

Prince Von Starhemberg

Prince Von Starhemberg, who is vice chancellor, in a defiant speech at Horn warned his political opponents that his heimwehr, or home guard, would be dissolved "only over my dead body."

Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg, speaking at Baden, retorted that "Austria is not Italy and Austrians are not Fascists."

Von Starhemberg asserted that if internal foes press too hard there will be a "repetition of 1934"—when the heimwehr triumphed in a short but bloody civil war against Socialists. False friends surround Schuschnigg, von Starhemberg said, and the heimwehr plans to protect him from them.

For Austria, said Starhemberg, there are three possibilities—a continuation of the authority of the state, Nazism, or communism. He asserted the heimwehr is determined to preserve the Fascist system and would continue as a separate organization but that other private armies would be absorbed by the regular army.

Advance of the Italians in Ethiopia Continues

ITALY'S victorious troops in northern Ethiopia continued their advance on Addis Ababa, though it was somewhat retarded by the efforts of the natives to blow up the roadways and otherwise harass the invaders. The Italian motorized column in this movement is the most formidable yet formed in this war and is notable for the large number of white troops included.

General Graziana's southern army, meanwhile, was driving toward Harar, second city of the empire, in three columns. The Ethiopians were putting up stiff resistance at various points but everywhere were driven back, according to Italian dispatches.

Contreras Is Elected President of Venezuela

ELEAZAR LOPEZ CONTRERAS, an army officer who rose to the rank of general under the late dictator, Juan Vincente Gomez, is now president of Venezuela. The national congress elected him to that office by a vote of 132 to 1 and directed that he assume the office on May 29. As president of the chamber, Contreras became temporary president on the death of Gomez.

Supreme Court Decision in Stock Yards Case

UPHOLDING a reduction of rates and charges at the St. Joseph, Mo., stockyards, the Supreme court held that the findings made by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace justified the rates he set and that the stockyards operators had failed to show confiscation.

Justice Louis D. Brandeis, Harlan F. Stone and Benjamin Cordozo agreed that the rates should be upheld but in an opinion by Justice Brandeis expressed belief that the court went too far in passing on the fairness of rates.

Two Well-Known Writers Taken by Death

DEATH came to two of America's well known writers. One was Finley Peter Dunne, creator of "Mr. Dooley," the genial satirist of modern life whose witty sayings delighted two generations. The second was Percy Hammond, veteran dramatic critic of the New York Herald Tribune, one of the foremost of the country's commentators on matters theatrical. Both passed away in New York city.

Secret Panama Treaty Is Cause of Concern

ARMY and navy officials were reported to be concerned over a new treaty with Panama which is being secretly considered by the government. It was said an uncorrected text of the pact showed it provides for "joint conversations" rather than for defense of the Canal Zone in event of aggression. The grant by Panama for the "use, occupation, and control of lands and waters outside the jurisdiction of the United States," if necessary, is renounced by this country in the treaty.

Chairman Pittman of the senate foreign relations committee said closed hearings on the treaty soon would be completed, after which the senate might consider the document in secret session in order to avoid international complications. Senator Hiram Johnson has said he will try to have the text of the pact made public before it is taken up by the senate.

Steiwer to Be Key-Noter for the Republicans

WHEN the Republicans gather in national convention at Cleveland next June their keynote for their Presidential campaign will be sounded by Frederick Steiwer, the eloquent and handsome United States senator from Oregon. He was selected to be temporary chairman of the convention by unanimous vote of the arrangements committee of the national committee after due consideration had been given the names of several other prominent Republicans.

Senator Steiwer

Observers held that the motive in picking Steiwer was a desire of the party leaders to give the convention a western atmosphere at the start, with an especial eye to agriculture. The senator has been actively identified with wheat growing and his home town, Portland, is a center of the northwestern battleground of the November elections.

Congressman Bertrand Snell of New York, minority leader in the house, was selected to be permanent chairman of the convention, a position he held in the convention of 1932.

Leftists Are Winners in French Elections

COMMUNISTS and various brands of Socialists appear to have won a considerable victory in the French elections for the chamber of deputies, though the large number of run-off elections necessary may tone down the results. The greatest gain is shown by the Communists, who are likely to have 50 seats; but this does not please the Radical Socialists for they cannot count on the Communists in forming a government and fear that without them the chamber will be ungovernable.

Senate Passes Emergency Flood Control Bill

DISREGARDING warnings by Senator Vandenberg of Michigan against too hasty action, the senate passed a bill introduced by Senator Overton of Louisiana authorizing the expenditure of $272,000,000 for flood control work on the lower Mississippi river and its tributaries. There was no record vote. The bill has no relation to the omnibus flood control measure now pending, which may reach a billion. The sum named in the senate bill is authorized merely to be appropriated and will have to be put in a deficiency appropriation bill. Senator Overton declared it was justified by emergency conditions.

In addition to the 272 million dollars there is authorized an appropriation of 15 millions to be allocated by the secretary of war and used in rescue work or repair and maintenance of flood control works.

Rescue of Entombed Men Is Epic of Heroism

THAT old gold mine at Moose River, Nova Scotia, provided an epic tale of unselfish and heroic human endeavor that will be told for many a year. For ten days more than a hundred experienced miners strove unceasingly to rescue three men who had been trapped by the fall of dirt and rocks in the 140-foot level of the abandoned mine they were inspecting. Machinery and other equipment were brought from far away. A diamond drill was driven through and through this small opening, communication was established and food was dropped down but already one of the three was dead of hunger and exhaustion. Finally the desperate efforts of the rescuers were successful and the two survivors were brought safely to the surface, together with the body of the dead man. Those saved were Dr. D. E. Robertson, famous and beloved surgeon of Toronto, and C. A. Scadding. The one who did not live was Herman Magill, also of Toronto.

Black Committee Scored by Publishers

WHAT American newspaper publishers think of the actions of the Black lobby committee was expressed forcibly and unequivocally in resolutions adopted by their national association at its annual meeting in New York. The committee was accused of having violated the first, fourth and fifth amendments to the Constitution by its seizures of private communications, and the publishers recommended that all victims of the committee's acts seek civil damages and demand the "prosecution of all involved in the odious affair under the criminal statutes of the United States."

Hello, Everybody!

"The Turn of a Wheel"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

WHATEVER you might say about gambling, it takes nerve to do it. The best of the professional card sharks are men who can keep a poker face and never bat an eye when they're betting their last nickel. Yes, it takes plenty of nerve to gamble with your money—but it takes a doggone sight more courage to gamble with your life.

I've got a yarn here from Adventurer William Joseph Brinkley, of Brooklyn, N. Y., and unless I'm no good at all at reading between the lines of a story, Bill Brinkley is one of those lads who can keep a cool head and figure out the odds even at moments when his life is in the greatest of peril.

If Bill hadn't had that faculty he wouldn't be here collecting his ten and joining the Adventurers' club today. For back in 1915 fate tested out those iron nerves of his—and it was one of the most rigorous tests fate ever dished out to a guy, at that.

Iron nerve or no iron nerve, Bill admits he was pretty scared when it happened. Maybe "pretty scared" isn't quite the expression for it either. When it was all over Bill's nerves felt more like putty than iron.

Bill Had a Prosaic Job Checking Freight Cars.

It was down in the town of Atlanta, Ga., where he was working as an interchange clerk for the Central of Georgia railroad. Bill was just a young lad then, and his job consisted of checking up on cars that were to be switched from one line to another. It was during the June peach season and there was a lot of traffic on the line. The railroad yard was full of box cars and it kept both Bill and his partner, Willie Baker, on the jump most of the time.

The first job in Bill's routine was to get the seal numbers on the cars as soon as a train entered the yard. Bill would get them on one side while his partner, Willie, got them on the other. They were supposed to wait for those trains at the break-up track, but sometimes they would walk out to meet them and ride in on the first car. That's what they were doing when Old Lady Adventure swooped down and got Bill in her clutches.

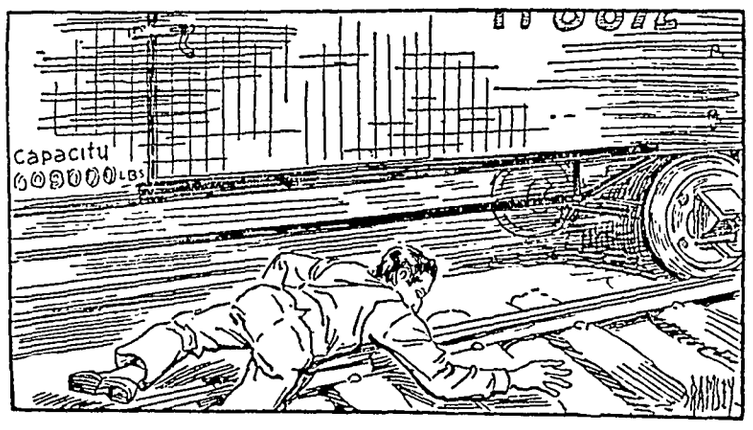
They had walked out to meet the "Special" and the Special was late that night, so, without realizing it, they walked a little farther than they had intended. They met it quite a ways out of the yard when it was going at a pretty fast clip. Willie caught the first car, but Bill let three or four go by before he could make up his mind to jump for it. He caught the fifth car, and since he was supposed to check the other side of the train, he started to climb over the top.



He Threw His Body Over the Rail Just in Time.

But Falling Under a Train Isn't So Prosaic!

But Old Lady Adventure didn't ever intend that Bill should get to the other side of that train. As he reached for the top grab-iron with his right hand the one he was holding with his left broke away from the side of the car. His body swung out from the side of the car and started to fall.

As Bill fell he clutched at the top grab iron. He caught it, but his weight broke the hold. His body twisted—swung around between the cars. Then, as he dropped, his left leg hit the draw head. He swung head downward and fell—under the train.

"I lay flat on my back," says Bill, "and watched the bottoms of the cars whiz by only a few inches from my face. The wheels ground past only a few inches from my body on either side. I lay for a moment utterly unable to move. Then my mind began to race.

Underslung Hopper-Bottom Cars Meant Certain Death.

"In a flash I had figured everything out. I had been lucky enough to land between the tracks—not on them. As long as I did not move I was perfectly safe unless—and there was the horrible possibility—unless there was a hopper-bottomed coal car in that train. The hoppers of those cars are only a few inches from the ties. If one of them hit me I would be mangled—mashed to a pulp—spread along a half mile of track."

And there was a darned good possibility that not one but several of these hopper-bottomed cars were in the train. In long trains like the one Bill was under it was the custom to put short, empty coal cars between the refrigerator cars to cut down the side sway. Bill knew that. His mind was clicking on all four in his moment of peril—taking in every consideration.

There was just one way out—a perilous way—but something told Bill it was a better risk than waiting for one of those murderous hopper bottoms. He began watching the wheels as they clicked by—gauging their speed and their distance.

Courage Plus Quick Thinking Saved Bill's Life.

Where two cars were coupled together the wheels were only about four feet apart, but between two wheels on the same car there was a space of forty feet. If he could throw his body over the rail as the front wheel passed, and get across before the rear wheel hit him—he'd be safe.

There was no time to lose, but Bill gauged those moving wheels carefully. He nerved himself and tensed every muscle. Then, as a front wheel flashed by, he started to roll.

He hit the rail and started to go over. Would he get across in time? Bill didn't know because his eyes were shut. He didn't dare look at the thing he was doing. Then, all at once, he felt himself go over the top of the rail. He opened his eyes and saw clear sky overhead. He had made it!

"Then," says Bill, "came the reaction. I began trembling all over and got sick as a dog. And to this day the mere sight of a hopper-bottom coal car can give me a bad case of chills."

Primary Cause of Decay of Teeth Still Unknown

Teeth may decay in spite of a completely adequate diet, it is shown by experiments at the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Columbia university. Tests lasting three years contradict the theory, widely held in both scientific and lay circles, that tooth decay is caused by a dietary deficiency.

"The practical significance of this finding is that, while we know it is possible to reduce the amount of caries or dental decay by improving the diet, we now know that we cannot prevent decay completely by this last method," Dr. Theodor Rosebury, assistant professor of bacteriology, who conducted the research, writes in Scientific American Magazine. "The reason for this is that a deficient diet is a modifying influence rather than the primary cause of caries, which still remains virtually unknown."

Doctor Rosebury fed five generations of rats "a fully adequate diet." Over a period of three years, the rats continually developed caries. "This result," he explained, "checks with human experience to the extent that we know the disease occurs in human beings healthy in all other respects and giving evidence of adequate nutrition. We can produce caries more rapidly with diets deficient in mineral elements. But no matter how adequate we make the diet, dental caries is still produced."

To Drop In; to Drop Up

Idiomatic phrases in the English language are the despair of foreigners, the phrases so rarely make sense if the words are considered separately. The idiom, "to drop in," meaning to happen in, as for a chat, is well established, and is an accepted part of our speech. "To drop up" is not generally accepted, possibly because of the utter incongruity.—Literary Digest

Stainless Steel's New Use

A new use has been found for stainless steel in Yorkshire, England, where it will be laid in thin sheets on the bed of a river to prevent the channel of a new reservoir from becoming choked by moss and other vegetable growth, according to the Canadian National Railways. Stainless steel was first developed in Sheffield, center of the steel industry in Great Britain.

FERRY'S SEEDS are at home in ANY climate

Claims that special seeds are necessary for certain climates are misleading. The successful cultivation of gorgeous flowers and tender vegetables depends primarily on the quality of the seeds, and the care you give them.

Ferry-Morse Seed Co. has devoted 80 years to developing and improving the quality of vegetable and flower seeds. At The Ferry-Morse Seed Breeding Institute Stations in Rochester, Mich., and Salinas, Cal., over 52,000 germination tests are conducted annually to assure you that Ferry seeds will grow . . . over 9000 purity trials are conducted to insure uniformly superb quality.

That's why you can plant Ferry's seeds in any part of the country—any climate—and reap the rewards of the quality bred into them.

HIGHWAY PATROL FORCE NEEDS MORE MEN

Oran Pape, Iowa Highway Patrolman, got his man, but paid with his life last Wednesday. If Pape had had a companion with him he probably would be alive today. Pape lost his life coping with and armed, desperate criminal who drew a gun on him as he approached the bandit's car. Pape was ordered into the car, the gun shoved into his side and when Pape tried to grab it, the bandit shot, mortally wounding Pape. The courageous young highway patrolman struggled and wrested the gun from the bandit and shot him through the head.

Pape today is both a hero and a martyr.

But the people of Iowa are going to demand that the highway patrol force be at least doubled. These splendid, courageous young men should not be asked to go out single-handed to cope with bandits' bullets. Day or night, there should be at least two patrolmen in every car touring the highways of Iowa.

The cost has been great, but the Iowa Highway Patrol have elevated themselves to the plane of the widely known "Canadian Mounted." Like the "Mounties" THEY GET THEIR MAN.

MOTHER'S DAY FOR ALL MOTHERS

Next Sunday is Mother's Day and millions of American children will express affection for their mothers in some tangible way.

This is a splendid idea and all of us should appreciate the opportunity it offers. Affection and love for one's own mother is the natural order of living and in some individuals has grown into a veneration for motherhood in general and is marked by increasing concern for the physical well-being of all mothers.

Mother's Day will not have achieved its purpose in our lives until we, as a people reach this last stage. Unhappily, the number of deaths that accompany motherhood in the United States every year indicates a tragic failure on our part to do all that should be done. Encouraging, however, is the sentiment that has demanded that steps be taken to assure proper safeguard for all mothers and to save the lives of many women needlessly sacrificed each year.

The individual reader of this article may think that his or her influence is small, but nevertheless we urge everyone to take some interest in the problem. Certainly civilization has not reached a very high level when such a condition continues to exist without effective protest from children who have grown to maturity and understand the factors involved.

"Yes," we hear a lady exclaim, "but my article was omitted last week when I sent it in on time, and another account of the wedding printed that was not as good as mine." Now, listen there! Ladies always present problems. Anyway, here's the answer:

Very often a newspaper gets two accounts of such important things as weddings. We have received, on occasion, an account of a wedding from the bride, the groom's mother, bridesmaid and one friend We couldn't print 'em all. ## KEEP FOREIGN PRODUCTS OUT

Some millions of bushels of foreign wheat came into the country last year. It was sold in competition with American wheat. Vast amounts of money left the country for the payment of importations of various farm products in addition to wheat. The money sent abroad to pay for importations did our farmers no good at all. If that money had been spent here for American farm products, our farmers and others would have benefited.

As long as we have a farm problem in this country resulting from overproduction not a single bushel or pound of any foreign product should be sold in our markets in competition with domestic goods. This country has more unemployed workers than all of Europe. We cannot be under any obligation to help other peoples regain their economic equilibrium as long as our own business affairs are more out of balance. Let us employ common sense and solve our own problems first.—Sioux City Journal.

CANCER ON THE BODY POLITIC

The growth of Government pay rolls is placing an increasing and intolerable burden on the taxpayer. Already, it is estimated, direct and hidden taxes take a third of the people's income. Second, and equally important, we are permitting the creation of a vast and cancerous bureaucracy which saps the productive energies of the nation, limits our rights and liberties and endangers the very existence of a free democracy.

We need less government and cheaper government. We need fewer feeders at the public trough, and more productively employed workers. Continuance of the present trend will lead us inevitably to bankruptcy, chaos—and finally, ruin.—Durham, N. C., State Progress.

WEIGHED AND FOUND WANTING

The great complaint against the New Deal is that so many billions were spent in order to produce so limited a benefit, by resort to extravagagantly over-organized schemes to do so many things that not only did not need to be done, but were in some cases so ridiculous that defense of them is impossible. Theorists have proved themselves to be an expensive luxury—worse than the thing they sought to improve—and it is of little worth to assert that at least they were well-meaning. Out of it all grows the conviction that the first and great commandment now is to get rid of Franklin D. Roosevelt.—Lowell, Mass., Star.

NOTICE OF HEARING OF RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY FOR PAVING CERTAIN STREETS IN THE TOWN OF KLEMME, IOWA, AND FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A STREET IMPROVEMENT DISTRICT.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN

Notice is hereby given that there is now on file in the office of the Town Clerk of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, a proposed resolution of necessity for the construction of street improvements by paving in said Town to-wit

Commencing on Main Street at the East line of Second Street, extending thence West on Main Street to the point were said Main Street intersects the first tracks on the right-of-way of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company in said Town.

The type of material shall be two strips of seven inch reinforced Portland Cement pavement, each seventeen feet in width each laid adjacent to and on each side of an eighteen foot pavement slab now laid on said street The method of construction shall be by contract. Private property will be assessed for the cost thereof and in said resolution of necessity, it is proposed that so much of the cost of said improvement as the law permits, shall be assessed to the abutting and adjacent property, specially benefitted by said improvement in the manner provided by law The cost of such construction shall be assessed as a special tax against all lots or part of lots, according to area, so as to include one-half of the privately owned property between the street improved and the next street whether such privately owned property abut upon said street or not.

Said resolution of necessity further provides that the cost of the intersections or twenty-five percent of the total cost of said improvement shall be paid by said Town, out of its Improvement Fund or out of the proceeds of bonds issued against the Town Improvement Fund against which bonds may be issued upon all the taxable property within said Town, as by law provided.

Said proposed Resolution further provides that the Council may issue certificates or bonds, as the case may be for the purpose of providing for the payment of so much of the cost of said improvement assessed upon property subject to assessment therefor, in anticipation of the deferred payment of assessments

A hearing will be held in the Council Chamber of the said Town of Klemme, Iowa, to be held at Town Hall in Klemme, Iowa, at 8 00 o'clock in the forenoon on the 21 day of May, 1936, regarding the adoption of said resolution of necessity, and unless property owners at the time of final consideration of said resolution, have on file with the Clerk, objections to said improvement or the amount of the proposed assessment, they shall be deemed to have waived all objections thereto.

Dated this 29 day of April, 1936.

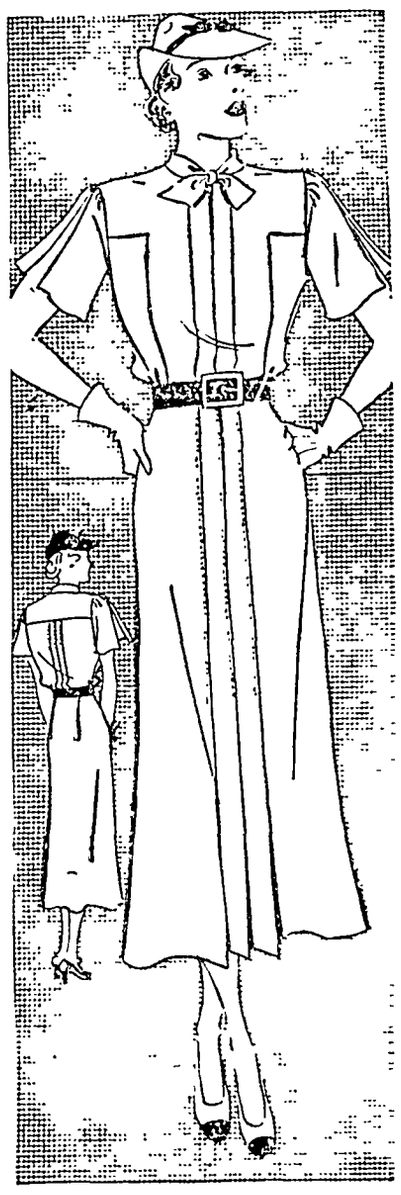
New Slit Sleeves and Youthful Bodice Go With This Spectator Sports Frock



Pattern No. 1868-B

Some are chosen and some are not, as you remember. And this is one of the "summer" chosen! A pretty bad pun, but this perfectly stunning spectator sports frock makes up for it. And you can wear it yourself when summer sets in if you'll send for the pattern now.

It is surprisingly easy to make, and with the aid of the step-by-step chart, illustrating the cut and fit of the new slit sleeves and the way to pleat and stitch-up the youthful bodice, you will immediately realize how automatically it goes together. The bodice has a lot of blouse to it, even makes you suspect that it's held underneath by an elastic band, and the side pleats of the skirt harmonize beautifully with the action pleats in the back blouse.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1868-B is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 16 (34) requires 4½ yards of 39 inch material. Send fifteen cents for the pattern.

The Barbara Bell Pattern Book featuring spring designs is ready. Send fifteen cents today for your copy.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—One swallow does not make a summer nor does one statement, even though from a high official, make a condition absolute. But one statement from a high official under the present New Deal relief setup comes rather close to disclosing the transcendent importance of the nation's relief problem in American economy at this time.

Relief Problem

I refer to the recent testimony by Harry A. Hopkins, Works Progress Administrator and professional reliever, before the house committee on appropriations. He told that group a few days ago that 3,853,000 heads of families or unattached persons were receiving a livelihood for themselves and their families from the federal government on March first of this year. If this be true, and it can hardly be disproved, there are nearly fifteen million persons dependent directly upon federal assistance. And the condition appears even worse when it is shown that about ten million others are receiving assistance from state, county and city relief or charitable organizations. In short, the Hopkins testimony reveals that about twenty per cent of all of our people are living on relief money.

These figures are astounding. They are made the more amazing when one considers that the condition exists even after the New Deal has expended approximately twenty-one billions in its three years of government management, the bulk of the outgo being directly chargeable to what Mr. Roosevelt has consistently maintained was an emergency.

I have reported to you intermittently heretofore the various stages through which Reliever Hopkins has gone in his search for means to solve the relief problem. I have been among those observers here who have felt that even though Mr. Hopkins lacks practical experience in commercial life and even though he casts aside every consideration except those inherent in the minds of a man who has devoted his life professionally to relief work, that he should be given time to solve the problem. It seems to me, however, that he has had ample time to find the answer if he is ever going to provide a solution. Neither he nor President Roosevelt has given any indication yet that they know the answer or even have a clew to it. The net result of their efforts to date has been the expenditure of money in unprecedented amounts and the piling up of a debt, the like of which this country never has known.

Mr. Hopkins has gone about his job smugly and with that apparent complacency that characterizes the official who is convinced that he alone is equipped to do a particular job. By his attitude, he has created in congress a feeling that he thinks he is a superior being and if anything makes a congressman hot under the collar, it is to see a member of the executive branch exhibit a pose that the congressmen are dumbbells. Some of them are, of course, but that is not true of all and it is fast doing Mr Hopkins no good at all to show arrogance towards the men who go out and campaign directly for the votes of the people.

I said that the relief problem was of transcendent importance in governmental affairs at this time. That is true because I believe the conviction is growing that the whole New Deal policy on relief is impractical and visionary; that it is founded upon a wrong psychology; that it is creating in this nation the greatest mass of panhandlers and "the world owes me a living" type or class of individuals that has ever existed anywhere and that, in addition the men who are doing the job for the federal government lack the ability to understand its whole significance

Visionary Policy

As proof of the observations I have just stated, let me point out how the demands for vast expenditures of money and wholesale methods of relief for the destitute have subsided in congress. Time was when a half dozen so-called welfare workers, college professors or organization leaders could get a hearing by the simple crook of a finger before a congressional committee. Such men as Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, and Senator Costigan of Colorado, and the late Senator Cutting of New Mexico, to mention only a few, would weep salty tears in senate speeches; they would call for ten billions for this and five billions for that and other billions for other things and shout that people were starving in the midst of plenty. And they were starving in the midst of plenty, but the shouting and the tumult raised by these political saviors did not provide a solution for the problem. I have a hunch that the silence of such men as these through the last year can mean only that they now see they were off on the wrong foot. They cannot help but realize that their theories were all wet, because Mr. Hopkins certainly has disproved the value of their plans.

Another indication of how congress feels is the movement to divide the billion and a half relief fund, which President Roosevelt asked, between Mr. Hopkins and Public Works Administrator Ickes. The President demanded that congress give the whole fund to Mr. Hopkins. It probably will work out that way eventually but the feeling against Mr. Hopkins cannot be denied. It is violent and only a small part of it has come to the surface.

The congressmen could not afford to see the flow of money cut off in an election year so they maneuvered to spank Mr. Hopkins by seeking to give a portion of the money to Mr. Ickes.

Now, it is currently rumored that Mr Ickes, who never has liked Mr. Hopkins, has done some lobbying in the fine underground manner of which he is capable. He sincerely believes that the use of funds in the construction of permanent things like buildings, roads and bridges gives the government and taxpayers at least something for their money. But, be that as it may, the ground swell against Mr. Hopkins is very powerful and if Mr. Hopkins possessed any understanding of the science of the times he would see it. Thus far he has given no indication that he understands what it means.

Where will it all end?

The answer to this relief problem is not now near enough to hazard a guess.

What's the Answer?

Let us go back for a brief review. When President Roosevelt took hold of the relief problem early in his administration, he advanced two theories. They were to solve our problems and solve them quickly. He urged the NRA and the PWA, which with the AAA, formed the first battalion of the alphabetical army. The NRA was designed to regiment business and indirectly force reemployment by the shortening of hours and the spread of work. The PWA was to provide a lot of construction jobs immediately, giving work to those not absorbed in private commerce and industry and thus take up the slack until buying power of individuals had been restored.

By November, 1933, it became quite evident to unbiased observers that NRA and PWA were falling short of the mark. So, out of the Presidential hat came the CWA. Congress promptly provided funds so the Civil Works administration—and here is where professional reliever, Mr. Hopkins, came on the scene—could hire unemployed who had not been absorbed by PWA or had not been restored to jobs in commerce and industry by NRA.

It was not long until CWA was as much in disrepute as the original schemes for providing employment. I believe it was in even greater disrepute because ordinary citizens could see the utter waste and the reckless expenditures of money occurring under CWA for its relief raking and stone gathering and other nonsensical job-creating results. CWA went the way of any unsound proposition.

Forward then came FERA. It was a proposition of emergency relief. Washington writers were deluged with speeches and statements that none should be allowed to starve. The spigots of the treasury were opened wide and $4,880,000,000 gushed forth. In every section of the country, federal money was distributed and distributors in Washington were none too careful of how they passed it out. In parallel lines with FERA, the politicians formed to the right. They saw the money and from precinct to pinnacle of politics, they were on the job and they have been on the job ever since.

Last year, the President became convinced that there was too much waste; that FERA was building up a clientele of millions who were saying, both publicly and privately, that it was no use to work when the government would feed them and he ordered a quick change in course.

Too Much Waste

With this change in course came a locking of horns between Messrs. Hopkins and Ickes. Mr. Ickes was licked by the simple expedient of a new federal agency. Bounding forth came Mr. Hopkins' own brain child, WPA. While it stands for Works Progress administration, a different name, the initials, to those who have studied the situation, spell FERA and CWA combined.

The President announced to the country that "this business of relief must end." Those who could not be employed must be taken care of by the states and local governments and those who were employable would be taken off relief but they must do work for the funds which the federal government passed out to them. The result has been a considerable mess and there is not a day goes by that congressional mail does not reveal cruel results, absolute destitution and hardship and privation unparalleled in the United States.

Where will it all end?

"This business of relief" is still relief by whatever name the alphabetical agency in Washington may be known. It can be only relief and there can be no doubt that it must be continued.

Although President Roosevelt had demonstrated his willingness to make shifts in his program, it is becoming more and more evident that a fundamental alteration of his whole scheme must be undertaken.

TALL TALES

As Told to:

FRANK E. HAGAN and ELMO SCOTT WATSON

The Absent-Minded Carpenter

WHEN Charles G. Grant, former Ohio newspaper man, was a boy in Columbus he knew a carpenter named J. Elmer Putterbaugh who was just about the best in the business. No job was ever too big for him to tackle, according to Mr. Grant. "Why, I remember the time," he says, "when J. Elmer took the contract to build a big church over near Washington Court House. He got so interested in his work that he forgot to stop. So the main aisle was so long that they had to have two preachers—one to stand at the altar and marry folks and the other to stand at the front door and christen their first baby as they came out."

Another time J. Elmer's absentmindedness got him in trouble. He was shingling the roof on a barn when a thick fog came sweeping up the valley from the Ohio river. J. Elmer kept right on shingling and without noticing what he was doing shingled 26 feet of fog beyond the edge of the roof before he noticed his mistake.

This turned out to be pretty serious because he fell and broke one of his legs off clean when he tried to get down. As a result he had to have a wooden leg, but that meant more trouble. Every time J. Elmer reached down to scratch his knee cap he'd get a splinter in his finger. That made him so angry that he'd grab his saw and saw his wooden leg right off. It broke him up buying new wooden legs. At last he went to a pauper's grave.

"But they had a hard time keeping him in it," declares Mr. Grant. "You see, J. Elmer was something of a crossroads philosopher—just full of wise saws. His ghost used one of these to saw his way out of the pine box in which they buried him. Folks got pretty tired of having his ghost chasing around at night. So they finally captured it, enclosed it in a box of chilled steel and from that time on there has been nothing but frozen silence out of J. Elmer Putterbaugh."

The Crazy Woman Wrangler

ART QUIGLEY was a cow hand, temporarily, for Half Circle ranch near Buffalo, Wyo.; it was there he met the wrangler from Crazy Woman River and heard his story.

"I was a tenderfoot," acknowledges Quigley. "So much so, I'd rise at daybreak, saddle up and ride to Buffalo to eat hash house breakfast with the rest of the Chinamen.

"One morning another rider yelled at me, back trail, but I paid no attention. Figured he'd spotted me for a tenderfoot cause I wore the only stiff-brimmed Stetson of the county.

"Catching up, the stranger introduced himself as the Wrangler from Crazy Woman River. An old fellow, but plenty pert and capable. Pointing to a grove we passed, the wrangler said that there, after a night in Buffalo, he met a bear. Had only a rifle and just three .22 shorts—not much to use if you're loading for bear.

"He drew careful bead and fired. The bear went down. Then he was up. It was like the radio report of a prize-fight. My friend aimed and fired. Again the bear fell, once more was up. Aiming carefully over his horse's neck, the man from Crazy Woman fired his last .22 and saw the bear fall.

"Leaping down, Bowie knife in hand, he charged. And he was tremendously relieved to discover three bears, all dead in the trail . . .

"I believe the story implicitly," says Quigley. "You see, this Crazy Woman fellow never once regarded me as a tenderfoot, but he treated me like an old-timer on the range."

It's a Ringer!

ONE subscriber to the belief that, in the long run, truth must prevail is John D. McDougall, nestor among grain receivers in the Chicago market.

"Here is the proof of what I am compelled to tell," Mr. McDougall asserted, indicating a sheaf of beautifully ripened wheat. "The facts concern a friend and customer of mine, one A. J. Sundberg of Hillsboro, N. D.

"Sundberg shipped this sample of fine wheat. When I complimented him upon its quality he relaxed, as most folks do under the influence of praise, and he recalled some of the difficulties under which the grain grew.

"Why, even at a time this wheat was ripening—my friend told me—he hitched his wagon team to a weeping willow tree out in the fields and responded to the cheery invitation of the dinner bell.

"He was gone 41 minutes but grasshoppers invaded the place in such numbers they devoured both horses and all of the wagon except its tongue. When my friend finished his dinner all that was left of the horses was their shoes. And the grasshoppers were playing quoits with them."

Presidential Franks

Since the early days of the nation Presidents of the United States have been authorized to frank their mail, that is, send it post-free. Early laws, says Pathfinder Magazine, required the President's actual signature "written by his own hand" but from the time of Hayes on the well known "penalty" envelope has been used. More recently the custom has been to use the simple inscription, "The White House."

Who Are You?

The Romance of Your Name

By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

A du Bois?

IT IS most likely that the family of du Bois were originally foresters or forest-loving people, since the name itself means "of the wood." This was one of the oldest families in France and can be traced back through the noble Huguenot refugees, Louis and Jacques, to Christian du Bois of Artois, who himself was a lineal descendant of Macquaire du Bois, Count de Ronsay, living in the early part of the Twelfth century.

From France the family spread to Flanders and England. The first of the name in England was the knight Geoffori du Bois, who served in the armory of the great conqueror. Another brave warrior was Pierre du Bois, who served Henry IV of France.

Louis du Bois, who was born in 1626, married Catherine Blanschon, and with their two sons, who rejoiced in the patriarchal names of Abraham and Isaac, came to America and settled at Kingston, N. Y. Louis was a farmer and his brother, Jacques, was a silk manufacturer. This family had its share of hardships and adventure in Colonial days. In the Indian raid of 1663 Louis' wife and children were taken captive and were about to be made the feast for an Indian holiday when they attempted to "soothe the savage breast" by singing songs. This play for time enabled Louis du Bois and a party of men to reach the camp and save them.

Abraham du Bois' wife was Margaret Deyo, who received as her wedding portion 1,000 acres of land in Pennsylvania. The town DuBois, in Pennsylvania, is probably named for this family.

In the American Revolution the men of the du Bois family played an important part. Heitman's "Officers and Men of the Revolution" lists the names of Major Lewis, Lieutenants James and Henry and Captain David, all of the New York branch. Capt. Isaac DuBose served from South Carolina.

This family has produced many men and women of high attainments and great intellect. Among them are poets, scientists, statesmen and clergymen.

Bishop John du Bois, born in Paris, France, 1764, came to Virginia and was the first superior of the Sisters of Charity in the United States. He located in Virginia and was taught the English language by Patrick Henry.

The du Bois family of France is one of untold wealth and power.

The coat of arms shown here were borne by Louis, the Kingston settler. The motto "Tiens ta foy," keep the faith, is characteristic of this splendid family.

A Randolph?

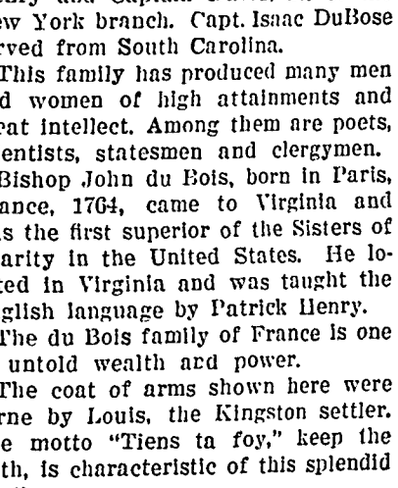
THE first Randolphs were residents of Hams, in the County of Essex, England. There lived Robert Randolph, from whom was descended the father of the American family of the name, William.

William was born in 1651. In Virginia he purchased an immense tract of land on the River James. He was a man of many important offices, being a member of the House of Burgesses, speaker of the house, attorney general and a member of the Royal Council.



He married Mary Isham, daughter of Henry and Catherine Isham of Virginia, who were descended from the Scotch Earls of Murray and other personages in England.

The Randolphs of America are found in many states, but the first home was in Virginia. They have intermarried with the Peytons, Bollings, Blands, Burwells, Pages and other well-known families.

Septic Tank Is Good Investment

Water-Tight Arrangement Is Sure to Hold Sewage for Bacterial Digestion.

By W. C. Krueger, Extension Agricultural Engineer, New Jersey Agricultural Experiment Station—WNU Service.

In early spring when the ground is saturated with water and drainage is impaired by frozen subsoil, the advantages of a septic tank over a cesspool or dry pit for sewage disposal are easily recognized.

Cesspools located in open gravelly or sandy soils operate freely in disposing of sewage but this free movement often causes contamination of nearby water supplies. Cesspools located in tight soils soon seal themselves and become inoperative.

Septic tanks, on the other hand, are water-tight and of a size sufficient to hold the sewage long enough to insure bacterial digestion. There is a second digestion chamber where the effluent undergoes additional digestion and aeration and from this chamber it is dispersed by means of a field tile disposal system laid underground in areas removed from the water supply. Septic tanks will operate from four to ten years, before removal of undigestible materials becomes necessary.

Septic tanks may be purchased ready-made or they may be constructed in place. Construction does not present any difficulties to the average workman and the cost of materials for a farm-built tank is generally lower than the price of purchased units. A frequent mistake is the installing of septic tanks which are too small. Tanks should have an approximate capacity of 100 gallons per person in the family.

Pruning Peach Trees in View of Obtaining Growth

Peach trees can be pruned successfully at any time during the dormant season. Some growers prefer to prune early in the fall in the belief that the wounds are well healed over by spring before the sap flow starts. Others claim that spring pruning is best owing to danger of freezing the wood during severely cold weather. Their theories, however, are hardly borne out by tests.

There is one distinct advantage to late winter pruning as compared to early winter pruning. If one knows there is no chance of getting a peach crop because of excessively low temperatures during the winter, a different method of pruning can be used than when there is a probability of having a fruit crop. If it is known that owing to extremely low temperatures there will be no fruit, the trees can be pruned more rigidly with a view to obtaining a maximum tree growth, whereas if there is likely to be a peach crop, one can prune with a view of obtaining a maximum yield of peaches. At any rate, pruning should be done in time for the spraying for leaf curl. A tree that has been well pruned is much easier to spray and less spray dope is needed to spray it. —Missouri Farmer.

Smoked Pork Sausage

Smoked pork sausage is made by grinding the meat into coarse particles or one-fourth-inch-sized cubes. Then are added one and a half tablespoonfuls of black pepper, two tablespoonfuls of salt. Sage, onion, or a dash of garlic, to suit the taste, then go in. The sausage is stuffed into casings, preferably beef casings, because they are large. The smoking is done in a fairly tight room over a fire where a fair amount of heat is used so that the meat is cooked enough to bring out the grease. The smoking is continued for three days. Sausage handled in this way will keep the year round, according to experienced men.—Chicago Tribune.

Fighting Rams of Texas

A curb on the fighting instincts of rival rams has recently been devised by Texan sheepmen. It consists of a rubber screen attached to the animal's horns and allowed to drop down over the upper line of its vision. While the ram can then see well enough to graze, it cannot see other leaders of the flock clearly enough for an efficient battle. Known as "combat blinds," the blinkers are widely used throughout the sheep country of western Texas, where rival rams now graze side by side in security and peace.—New York Times.

Fattening Steers

The advisability of grinding corn for fattening steers depends somewhat upon the feeding method. The practice is less common where hogs are kept in the feed lot to recover whole grain in the manure. Toward the end of the feeding period, says Wallaces' Farmer, ground corn may be advantageous because it will induce the cattle to consume more feed. If no hogs follow the steers, either ear corn or shelled corn should be ground.

Farm Sidelights

Dairy cattle can be fed to increase the organic iodine in their milk.

A Colorful Picture for Your Wall, Using Simple Embroidery Stitches

In honor of spring your house deserves a colorful new wall-hanging such as this, which depicts roses and lilacs in their natural splendor. You'll enjoy embroidering it—it's so easy even a beginner will be won over to this delightful occupation. The lilacs are in lazy daisy—the roses in satin and outline stitch; and you needn't frame it—just line it and hang it up.

In pattern 5527 you will find a transfer pattern of a hanging 15 by 20 inches; a color chart; material requirements; illustrations of all stitches needed; directions for making the hanging.

Send fifteen cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. 14th St., New York, N. Y.

Events are only the shells of ideas; and often it is the fluent thought of ages that is crystallized in a moment by the stroke of a pen or the point of a bayonet.

Best part of taking a detour on a country drive is that you have to drive so slow you can't run over any of the farmer's chickens.

Follow Natural Bent

The more we try to look what we are not, the smaller our chance becomes of fully being what we really can grow to be.

Once a public speaker hears the loud clapping of hands at something he has said, he feels he has opened the door to the secret of winning applause.

Rosa Ponselle Breaks Arm While Playing Opera Role

Rosa Ponselle, Metropolitan opera soprano, has a broken left arm as a result of the enthusiasm with which she and Rene Maison, the tenor playing opposite her, enacted their roles in "Carmen" in the company's appearance of the season in Baltimore. The small bone in her left forearm was broken near the elbow when Mr. Maison threw her to the stage floor.

Lovers of flowers will find a most beautiful flower garden at the Dr D P. Anderson home in southwest Klemme

Mrs. Anderson has spent a lot of time in beautifying the yard and has a flower garden that is nicely laid out and contains a large variety of flowers

The flower garden is laid out on a slope along the west side of the house and ends up in a natural appearing fish and lily pool toward the rear of the house.

Plenty of shrubbery placed about the yard adds to the attractiveness of the garden of which Dr. and Mrs. Anderson are both proud

Veishea Exposition At Ames This Week

KLEMME GIRL HAS PART IN ANNUAL IOWA STATE COLLEGE EXPOSITION

Nellie Stromer Engaged In Baking Cherry Pies For Veishea

Ames, Iowa—Nellie Stromer, daughter of Mr and Mrs Herman R Stromer, and a junior in home economics at Iowa State College, is actively engaged in baking cherry pies and preparing home economics open house for visitors to Veishea, 3-day exposition to be held May 14, 15 and 16 Other activities in which Nellie takes part are the Homemaker's Congress, Iowa State Players and Women's Athletic Association

During Veishea, Iowa State throws its doors wide open for the benefit of high school students and their parents and friends throughout the entire state Every department is holding open house and preparing exhibits to show the work of students, faculty, and graduates in the five divisions of the college—engineering, agriculture home economics, industrial science, and veterinary medicine.

Veishea opens May 14 with ceremonies at Memorial Union and registration for the home economics and agricultural congresses. Friday May 15, brings open houses and along with the educational features, there'll be those o-so-good cherry pies dished out at home economics "Just an old Veishea custom"—and there'll be thousands of them, all baked by pretty co-eds

Finally, on May 16, departments fraternities, and sororities will vie for prizes in the traditional Veihsea parade of gay floats. An estimated crowd of 20,000 visitors are expected to overflow the campus for these free educational phases of Veishea. To round out the 3-day exposition, there'll be such features as athletic events, a student-produced Nite Show, a spring concert, the annual student vodvil, an intercollegiate debate, and a swimming circus:

LARGE NEW BRICK AND FRAME BARN BEING BUILT AT RHINE LEMKE FARM

Will Have Plenty Of Room For Stock If Severe Winter Strikes

A fine modern barn will soon take its place on R R Lemke's nice farm northwest of Klemme

The new barn which is under construction will be 42x60 in size when completed Building block will be used for the first 8 feet and frame construction will rise above the block line.

The specifications for the new barn include Four-Square Lumber 40-year Red Cedar shingles, modern stalls and stanchions, litter carriers and other modern equipment furnished by the Northern Lumber Company

Mr Lemke, like many other farmers in this community, found that the severe winter just experienced can be made a lot easier for the farmer if he has plenty of barn room. And Rhine will have just that with the new barn.

W. F. M. S. WILL HAVE CHARGE OF M. E. MORNING SERVICE

The W F M S will have charge of the morning services at the M E Church next Sunday at 10 00 o'clock

A Missionary Thank Offering will be taken up during the service Mrs. Gus O'Krueg, of Goodell, will speak on "Building As We Go' There will be a vocal solo by Mrs Kilgore and a clarinet solo by C. G Waterman.

KLEMME HIGH SCHOOL TRIMS BELMOND NINE 1-0

Behind the 2-hit pitching of Leo Brinkman, local high school hurler, the Klemme Shamrocks defeated the Belmond high school nine 1 to 0 on the local diamond Friday afternoon Although hampered by wildness, Johnson, Belmond mound ace, also turned in a neat performance.

Attended* Parent's Golden Wedding Anniversary Sunday

Jim Reed and family drove to Ceylon, Minnesota, Sunday to be present at the Golden Wedding Anniversary celebration of Mr Reed's parents. All of Mr and Mrs. Reed's children and their families and many other relatives and friends were present to help them observe the important event. About one hundred people attended the celebration.

TREES BARBER SHOP WILL BE MOVED INTO NEW QUARTERS NEXT WEEK

Dr. Missman Will Have Office Rooms In The Wellemeyer Bldg.

Harlan Trees, who operates his barber shop in the Wellemeyer Building will move his shop equipment into new quarters next week. Mr. Trees has purchased a building which he will move to the vacant lot east of the creamery The building, 12x18 feet in size, will be remodeled into a barber shop He expects to have everything ready so he can move into the new location within a short time

Dr. Missman Will Move In Former Barber Shop Rooms

Dr. Missman has leased the room now occupied by the Trees Barber Shop. The rooms will be remodeled and partitions moved and the place redecorated for Dr Missman

Showers For Teachers

Last Wednesday evening a group of friends gathered at the school gym and had a shower on Miss Thorne, who is to be married early this summer Tuesday evening a group gathered at the school in honor of Mrs. Muenchow and had a shower in her honor. At both parties guessing games were played and a nice lunch was served, after which the gifts were opened They both received many fine gifts by which they can remember their Klemme friends.

GOODELL PRINCIPAL WILL TAKE POST AT SUPERIOR

Goodell—Principal Joseph Kissinger resigned his position in the local high school to accept the position of superintendent at Superior, Iowa. Mr Kissinger has been connected with the local system since 1930 Miss Katherine Blake of Belmond, who is teaching this year at Finchford, has been hired by the local board of education to teach primary here next year.

Fifty Hear Program

Garner:—More than 50 members of the Ladies Aid Society of the Zion Reformed church in town and the Women's Missionary society of the Peace Reformed church of Ell township listened to a program furnished. Betty Greiman gave an xylophone solo. Alma Jacobsen a reading and Mrs. August Haberkamp a paper on "Missionaries in Japan." The Rev. William Huenemann led devotions.

ABSENT VOTERS ARE URGED TO HURRY

Sick, disabled and absent voters will have less time to mark their primary election ballots and return them to the county auditor this year, County Auditor F C Missal reminded this class of citizens today.

Under the Iowa law the absent voter ballots cannot be marked earlier than twenty days before election. This would be May 11 this year. It is not likely, however that the printed ballots will be ready that early. Auditors must wait until after the May 1 deadline for filing before they can prepare ballot copy for the printers In previous years they have also had to wait for the official lists of state and district candidates sent from the state house at Des Moines

As a result it is not probable that the ballots will be ready for delivery until about May 15 They must be marked and returned by May 29, three days before the election this year May 30 is a holiday, May 31 is Sunday, and no absent voters ballots are accepted on election day, June 1.

Persons who vote in Hancock county but temporarily reside elsewhere, and disabled voters who will want to mark ballots in advance this year, are advised to get their applications in early.—Garner Herald.

MRS. BUSICK FUNERAL IS HELD IN GOODELL CHURCH

Goodell:—Funeral services for Mrs James Busick were held Wednesday in the United Brethern church, the Rev. Harry Herlein officiating Burial was in Amsterdam cemetery. Nancy M Church was born July 9, 1867, on a farm east of Goodell. On Sept 7, 1885, she was married to James Busick She is survived by her husband, one daughter, Mrs Clara Schmalle: three sons, Orick, Clifton and Dale of Belmond; one sister, Mrs. Ed Rhode and three brothers, O D Church of Kanawha, Gus Church of Minnesota and Nathen of Goodell.

Clear Lake Scene Of Bad Shipwreck Sunday

MAN OVERBOARD; HEAVE OUT THE LIFE LINE!

Fred J Arnold borrowed the sail boat belonging to his brother Asa. Milo Patet and Harold Jost Sunday afternoon, to sail the bounding waves at Clear Lake The waves must have been too bounding and the wind too windy, for soon an SOS call came from off shore where Fred was serenely (?) sitting on the top side of the overturned sailing boat, patiently awaiting the rescue squad.

Milo and Harold put forth to sea in a leaky old boat found along the shore and the three soon righted the boat, bailed out a considerable portion of the lake and went sailing merrily on.

Thus saileth the sailors!

FISHING SEASON OPENS AT 5 A. M., MAY 15TH

The fishing season officially opens Friday, May 15, at 5 a. m. The prediction is fishing will be good in Clear Lake this year

In almost every fishing lake, signs are being posted around fish spawning areas Fishing is not permitted within the boundaries of these areas until after the spawning season is over. Those planning to open the fishing season on May 15 are reminded by the Conservation Commission to look for the signs and observe the rule by not entering such areas In this way the natural reproduction of game fish is encouraged Spawning fish usually strike a lure readily during the spawning season when the fish is protecting its nest. At this time they should not be disturbed.

M. E. Ladies Aid

The regular monthly meeting of the M E. Ladies Aid will be held Thursday, May 21st at the church. There is a quilt to be finished, so come early and help sew.

Harberts Services Friday At Goodell

HIO HARBERTS PASSED AWAY TUESDAY EVENING

Mr. Hio Harberts, for 30 years a farmer and land owner of Twin Lake township, passed away Tuesday evening at the age of 66 years after a lingering illness of cancer.

Funeral services will be held Friday afternoon at the U. B. church in Goodell with the Rev. Harry Herlein in charge. Interment will be made in the Avery township cemetery, beside his wife who preceded him in death in 1931.

The Times will publish the obituary of the deceased in next week's issue.

CARLSON CO. WILL COMPLETE PAVING PROJECT THIS WEEK

Work is progressing rapidly on the paving project of Highway 179 into Klemme The Carlson Construction Co, who are doing the work, have been somewhat handicapped for want of men for the job.

However, with good weather, the paving should all be laid within the next day or two.

TEN ACRES OF RASPBERRIES SET OUT IN FIELD AT GARNER

Elmer and George Knaupp have completed the task of setting out 80,000 red raspberry roots at their farm 1½ miles east of Garner. The roots were set out one foot apart and in five foot rows. The plants are expected to bear next year

This year the boys will utilize the ground and keep the raspberries cultivated by planting sweet corn and pop corn between the rows.

MORE CORN, LESS OATS IS PROSPECT FOR 1936

With Average Growing Conditions Corn Prices May Drop Severely

Present indications are that the acreage planted to corn will be about as large as was anticipated by the March 1 report of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. asserts the May issue of Agricultural Economic Facts, Iowa State College Extension Service publication

The bureau report indicated a total acreage of corn of nearly 99 million acres in the United States and nearly 10½ million acres for Iowa.

The soil conservation program is likely to result in a considerable decrease in oats harvested, but is not expected to have much effect upon corn acreage.

If this prospect proves correct and if growing conditions are about average, corn prices will decline considerably The market for oats will be affected to some extent by corn prices, but if a large proportion of the acreage is clipped before harvest under the new federal program, oats may be more favorable than in 1935-36.

During the next 2 months prices of the better grades of corn will probably be steady to higher, although the cheaper grades are not expected to change much Oats and barley prices will soon be subject to new crop influences.

BUTTER THIEVES BREAK INTO FENTON CREAMERY

Kossuth County Sheriff Carl Dahlhauser reported to the state bureau of investigation Friday that thieves broke into the Fenton creamery Thursday night and trucked away 45 tubs of butter, each weighing 64 pounds.

Orchestra Party Monday Evening

In honor of Mrs. John Muenchow the former Miss Ford, director of the Klemme School Orchestra, the members of that organization will give a party Monday evening.

Birthplace of Maya Culture Sought in Central America

Ancient Indians Had Amazing Civilization

WASHINGTON.—The spotlight of discovery is focusing on the land of the Mayas. It looks as though news of ancient America's greatest civilization would break there soon.

An expedition is already digging in the very region where the most learned students of America's past have pointed, as the likely birthplace of the magnificent Mayan civilization. And that is in the highlands of Guatemala, south of Mexico.

Explorers heretofore have unearthed ruined cities of the Mayas in jungles of Yucatan and Guatemala. They have revealed these ancient Indians as master builders, astronomers, mathematicians, and inventors of a writing system. Belated respect is paid the Mayan calendar. It was more accurate than the calendar of Spain, when the Spaniards arrived in America and set about civilizing the benighted savages.

Baffling Question.

But what has baffled science is to explain when and where so extraordinary a civilization got its start.

So, the expedition of the Carnegie institution of Washington, which has launched on a campaign to explore mounds in the highland region, in the suburbs of Guatemala City, is being closely watched.

It was in the hill country, by the generally accepted theory, that the Mayas or their forefathers learned to plant corn. And when they became stable farmers, then their star rose.

Find Old Site.

At the site chosen for digging, discoveries have already been reported by Dr. A. V. Kidder, expedition leader. A stucco pyramid, three times rebuilt, and tombs containing pottery of great interest, are the initial finds. How old will the site turn out to be?

Potsherds found at the same site some years ago were hesitantly pronounced "early." Since then, archaeologists have accumulated more knowledge for establishing the antiquity of Mayan remains, as far back as the history has been pushed. The oldest known Mayan city, Uaxactun, goes back to several centuries before Christ.

Air Flow Curtain Protects Bridge of Liner Queen Mary

LONDON.—The use of aerodynamics and attention to air flow will make it possible for officers of the S. S. Queen Mary to stand on the navigating bridge, in open air, and yet be protected from the weather. An invisible, but no less real, curtain of air helps accomplish the feat.

The forward edge of the navigating bridge has a solid guard sheet curved forward which has, along the upper edge, an additional sheet of metal separated slightly from it. As the ship moves forward the curved portion catches the air and directs it upward through the slot arrangement.

This high-pressure curtain of air flows upward higher than a man's head before it is swept backward. Thus the navigating officers, standing behind the guard sheet, are in an area of low air pressure and protected from wind, rain, or snow which goes over their heads.

Has Wide Bridge.

Other features of the navigating bridge are of interest. So wide is the bridge that when navigating in port the officers standing at its ends are 12 feet out from the side of the vessel. For their protection both ends of the bridge have small houses where the officers are out of the weather.

Face Nerves Get Mixed As Aftermath of Injury

DURHAM, N. C.—Fibers of a facial nerve, recovering after an injury, may get mixed up and grow back to supply the wrong facial muscles, it appears from studies reported by Drs. Howard A. Howe and Sarah S. Tower, Johns Hopkins Medical school, at the meeting here recently of the American Association of Anatomists.

The studies were made on monkeys. The effects on the animals' face muscles of the nerve fiber mix-ups were considered similar to the ties that appear in man following injury to the facial nerve.

The reason for the facial twitchings and peculiar expressions following injury to the nerve appears to be roughly as follows: The nerve, recovering from the injury, sends out new fibers but these do not grow back to supply the same muscle fibers as before.

Yugoslavia Is Rich Field for Future Archeology Study

Traces of Prehistoric Man Found by Searchers

YUGOSLAVIA is one of the spots on the world map where archeologists expect to unearth important news of prehistory.

This answer to the popular question, "How do archeologists decide where to dig?" was brought out at Evanston, Ill., at the meeting of the Central section of the American Anthropological association.

Recent American expeditions, led by Dr. Vladimir Fewkes, have taken the lay of the land in Yugoslavia. By tramping over the ground north of Greece, where ancient men must have wandered and camped and traded, the pre-historians have studied the important geographic factors. The Danube river valley was a main highway, a sort of funnel through which traffic took lines of least resistance between the Near East and Europe.

Task Is Extensive.

Yugoslavia's own scientific institutions are making field explorations, but the task certainly cannot be accomplished by them alone, Robert McCormick Adams of the University of Chicago reported to the meeting of anthropologists.

Mr. Adams, who has worked with the American expeditions in Yugoslavia, told of discoveries which are regarded as a beginning.

Only a few traces of Old Stone age man have yet been found in Yugoslavia, though the cave dwellers of that long dark age must have frequented this "highway" country.

Stone Age Traces.

The New Stone age is clearer, from discovery and excavation of sites where people settled and practiced the new arts of farming, raising domestic animals, making good pottery and building wattle and daub houses.

What Yugoslavia was like in the Bronze and Iron ages has only begun to unfold.

It has been estimated, said Mr. Adams, that there are 100,000 Bronze and Iron age tumuli—or mounds—alone in southern Yugoslavia and Macedonia.

May Plan Future Industrial Growth on Geography Basis

PHILADELPHIA.—Economic geography is the basis on which the nation might well solve its troubles of the migration of industry from one region to another, and the resulting problem of a stranded population without employment, said Albert S. Carlson of Dartmouth college, before the Franklin Institute here recently.

Mr. Carlson, instructor in economic geography, declared:

"As a nation we are just beginning to recognize the seriousness of the unemployment problem. We are applying some intelligence to its solution, but only a small modicum of the knowledge and ability available. We are merely beginning when we are able to determine the number and character of those who are permanently displaced from the industries of a particular town. What are we going to do about it? There are three possibilities. We may provide relief for them and allow normal forces to work themselves out as best they may. It is unthinkable that we should proceed along this route much longer. What else can we do? We can develop new industries in these towns.

Moving Population.

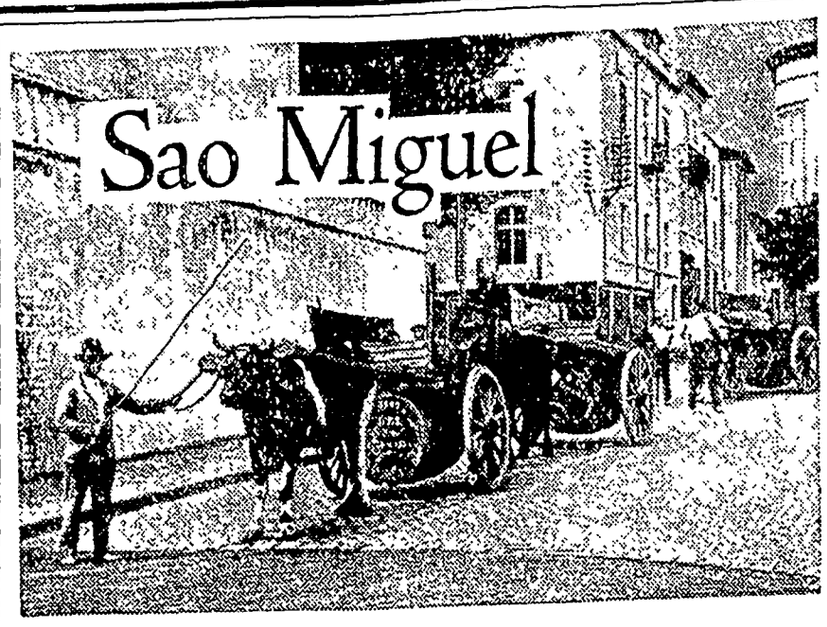
When this cannot be done profitably there is only one other possibility. That is to have responsible agencies suggest other regions where there are better opportunities for the stranded population. We can do this only when we recognize the remarkable possibilities for appraisal of present and future regional trends in the economic-geographic approach to social problems.

"We have reached a stage in the evolution of our national life when the results of scientific research must be consciously related to our social life. Modern geography offers a most valuable method for the co-operation of the social and natural sciences in the solving of our most fundamental national problem. This problem may be stated as the proper and more rapid correlation of all the changing factors operating in a region as science continually evolves new techniques that require new social adjustments."

31-Pound Gold Nugget Found in Ural Mountains

MOSCOW.—Studies of the two giant gold nuggets discovered in the Tyelguin mine in the Ural mountains have now been completed here. Their weights, as finally established, are 9,420 and 14,318 grams respectively or approximately 21 and 31.5 pounds.

The nuggets are quite unique and have a very interesting structure. Each nugget represents a very fine transparent net consisting of lamellar, octagonal, needleshaped and wireshaped gold crystals forming concretions.



Wine Barrels Are Carried Under the Carts.

SAO MIGUEL of the Azores Islands is turning from oranges to pineapples as its chief source of wealth. Excellent oranges are still grown, but since the island lost the British market a few years ago, pineapple culture has occupied agriculturists.

Natives of Sao Miguel hope to develop their island into an "Isle of Pines" which will provide a good part of Europe with practically all its fresh supply of pineapples.

An Englishman, a skilled horticulturist, arrived at Sao Miguel more than eighty years ago to lay out the famous Jose do Canto gardens. It was he who brought the first pineapples to his employer's hothouse. Twenty years later, the fruit was shipped to England, each pine in its pot selling for two guineas. England and Germany are now the chief consumers of Azorian pines, France and continental Portugal following.

The plant, which is here of the smooth-leaved Cayenne variety, is grown under glass, special beds of fermenting heath or some other mountain shrub being provided. All the plants are brought to blossom at the same time by a process of smoking, the value of which was accidentally discovered many years ago when a carpenter, working in one of the pineapple houses, chanced to set fire to a pile of shavings. To the surprise of the grower, the plants, instead of being spoiled, burst into flower. By this method practically all the plants in a hothouse can be marketed at the same time, many months earlier than formerly.

Little glass houses shimmer on emerald slopes in various sections of Sao Miguel, the exclusive producer of pineapples in this archipelago. Wrapped in cellophane or packed in excelsior and crated, the fruit is shipped to the European market by a fleet of three vessels owned by the growers. In 1934 about 2,000,000 pines, worth half a million dollars, were exported.

Tea, Too, Is Grown There.

Another exotic industry on this island is the production of black and green tea, which here retains its oriental name, "cha." Ever since they discovered the sea route to India and planted their settlements as far afield as Macao (Macau), on the coast of China, the Portuguese have been a tea-drinking nation.

There is an old belief that tea is better if it has not crossed the sea. Whether this is true or not, Azorian tea tastes to some much like the far eastern variety on its native soil. It is consumed locally and shipped to other parts of Portugal.

A number of Chinese were originally imported as instructors in the tea culture, but now only native labor, chiefly female, is employed. The plantations dot the hillsides on the northern side of the island, which has greater moisture than the south coast. The stiff little evergreen shrubs stand in precise rows, very foreign in appearance, contrasting strangely with the familiar European flora about them.

A motor road parallels the coast of Sao Miguel, with connecting crossroads, enabling the traveler to see much of beauty and interest, even in one day ashore, including trips to the two largest volcano craters.

On the country roads are slow-swaying bullock carts, with woven-willow bodies filled with heath for the pineapple houses. Some are of archaic pattern, with solid wheels of the Roman type, their approach heralded by a complaining, creaking "song."

Sao Miguel has a deliciously green and restful countryside. Checkerboard fields, brown and green, alternate with woods filled with songbirds. These islands, like those of the Madeira and Canary groups, are the habitat of the wild canary of greenish-gray hue. Its glad note is one of the pleasantest features of the Azores, where it seems to be more generous and more vocal than on the islands farther south.

Near every stone cottage stands a corn rick where brownish maize in the husk is hung to dry. It forms the staple cereal crop of the islands. Fava beans (broad beans) and yams are grown and are leading articles of export.

In the Crater of a Volcano.

Skirting pine-clad cliffs, a road climbs to a misty, heather-clad tableland; then descends into Furnas valley, shut in by towering green walls. Were it not for the puffs of steam ascending from its many boiling sulphur springs, it would be difficult to believe that this peaceful vale is the crater of a mighty volcano which more than once poured out its molten lava and which still speaks through vents in the hot sulphur-stained crust around the springs.

It is a beautiful picture from the heights, this quiet, sheltered valley with its long, narrow village meandering like a stream through woods and meadows. The lake, on a raised platform of the crater, lies some distance from the settlement, which is a favorite summer resort.

Prescott, the famed historian, came to Furnas as a young man to visit at the summer home of his grandfather, first American consular officer in Sao Miguel, who was appointed in 1795 by President Washington.

Furnas has a thermal establishment, where sulphur and iron baths are available. Near-by fountains supply various kinds of mineral water, the place being noted for the diversity of its waters and the proximity of hot and cold springs.

One deep, cavelike caldron, belching forth boiling mud and steam, is called "The Mouth of Hell." Its evil appearance and the strong smell of sulphur give the impression that this is really an entrance to the abode of His Satanic Majesty.

Stately manorial houses, erected centuries ago, are to be seen throughout Sao Miguel, usually set on the heights. One such house, built in 1724, is a delightfully romantic old place. The big stone-paved kitchen has a chimney-place which is a room in itself. Standing in it, beside the huge brick hearth, one can look up the wide chimney, which towers above the house, to a patch of blue sky. Such chimneys are a distinctive feature of Azorian houses.

Life of the Inhabitants.

The upper class of Ponta Delgada leads a pleasant life, quiet as compared with the stress of American cities. There is a social club where dancing is a favorite pastime; a coliseum seating 2,000; a sports field for football, tennis, croquet, and handball; a baseball park; and an open-air sea pool built in the rocks by the shore.

There are motion pictures twice a week, chiefly from Hollywood. American influence is apparent in the English spoken throughout the Azores. There seems to be a genuine liking for the United States. The Stars and Stripes are in evidence at every festival. During the World war, Ponta Delgada was an American naval base.

Economically self-contained, the Micaelenses are no less independent when it comes to their social pleasures. In their amateur shows the scenery is apt to be painted locally, the costumes made in the homes of the young men and women who participate. In their singing, dancing, and acting these young people exhibit amazing talent and poise.

The young folks mingle in crowds, but there is here no such free and easy companionship among them as exists in the United States. The chaperon is still in vogue and "balcony courtship" is carried on with its own prescribed etiquette, the girl leaning over the second-story balcony to talk with her admirer on the street below.

The finest sight on the island is the crater of Sete Cidades (Seven Cities). The view from the rim is magnificent. The cup-shaped crater is nearly ten miles in circumference and holds, besides a lake with a hamlet on its shore, pastures and cultivated fields and three volcanic cones due to subsequent eruptions.

Owing to varying depths and deposits, the lake, shaped like the figure 8, and sometimes spoken of as two lakes, is vividly green at one end, brilliantly blue at the other.

The Lindberghs, on their aerial odyssey from Greenland's icy mountains to the steaming jungles of the Amazon, swooped down over this secluded lake.

There are many among the poor of the Azores who have suffered since money orders have ceased to arrive from Manoel or Antonio, who formerly prospered in Providence or New Bedford. The Azorian assets are a stout heart, a willing hand, a productive soil, and a climate which, though damp and rainy six months of the year, is without extremes of temperature.

Wages are low, but food is cheap. The main diet of the peasant consists of soup of cabbages, beans and potatoes, white cornbread, and fish. Pork and beef are only for special occasions, such as religious holidays. In the Ponta Delgada market 60 small fish sell for two and a half cents; a pound of green peas for less than two cents. A fresh live lobster, which is only for the well-to-do, costs 25 cents.

Find Roman Ruins in Bavaria

A Roman temple, the third of its type, has been unearthed near Regensburg, in southern Bavaria. Coins found when a wall was excavated in an orchard at Ziegetsdorf, in this neighborhood, proved to hail from the Second and Third century after Christ, and inscriptions were discovered establishing beyond doubt that the wall had formed part of a temple dedicated to the god Mercury.

POULTRY

CAN REDUCE COST OF POULTRY FEED

May Replace Costly Rations With Soybean Meal.

By R. E. Cray, Poultry Department, Ohio State University.—WNU Service.

Poultrymen can reduce the costs of rations for chicks and for the laying flock by substituting pressure-cured soybean meal for part of the high priced ingredients that are used to furnish the birds protein.

Dried milk and meat scraps, two common materials used to furnish protein in poultry rations, cost more than the soybean meal; and the cost of the ration for laying hens is very important at this season of declining egg prices. The soybean meal can be used to replace at least one-half of the meat scrap and to reduce the amount of dried milk to 2 per cent of the laying ration. From 3 to 5 per cent of dried milk should be kept in chick rations.

Ground soybeans containing the natural oil cannot be used successfully as poultry feed, but the meal produced at mills where the oil is extracted is satisfactory except that a mineral mixture should be added. The mineral mixture can be made of 40 pounds bone meal, 20 pounds limestone, and 20 pounds salt. This mixture should be used at the rate of one pound to every five pounds of soybean meal.

At present market prices, dried milk is selling for five times as much as soybean meal and meat scraps are nearly twice as expensive. Decreasing the amount of milk in the ration will lower the vitamin G content but this can be supplied by feeding green grass, good legume hay, or alfalfa meal.

Early Care Basis for Future Flock Profits

The future success of the poultry flock depends a great deal upon the care and management of growing chicks in the spring. Give them proper care and they will grow into strong, vigorous, profitable birds.

Some of the fundamentals to observe while the chicks are young were pointed out as follows:

Do not overcrowd. See that there are not more than two chicks for each square foot of floor space in the brooder house.

Provide two half-gallon drinking founts for each 100 chicks. One five-foot mash hopper will be enough for each 100 chicks during the first three weeks.

From the age of three weeks until they reach broiler size, each 100 chicks should have two mash hoppers four inches high, six inches wide, and five feet long.

Inadequate feeding and drinking facilities is one of the worst faults in poultry raising.

Have adequately controlled ventilation. More chicks are killed or weakened by overheating than by chilling.

Keep the feed hoppers filled with a well balanced mash.

Aim to have the chicks consuming about equal parts of mash and scratch feed at the sixth week.

Maintain rigid sanitation.

Cull all slow developing chicks. These seldom "come through" and prove profitable.

When the weather permits, get the chicks out on the ground. A great deal of benefit is gained from sunshine, green feed, and fresh air.

Use Clean Dry Litter

Straw is not the best litter there is for baby chicks. Oat hulls, peat moss, finely ground corn cobs, shavings, etc., are said to be better. If merely the "best" litter were the only consideration not much would be left to say on the subject. The facts are farmers have to get by as cheaply as possible and at the same time strive for good results. It is true that wheat and oat straw becomes damp quickly and if not chopped up fine is too coarse for small chicks, yet on most farms it is by far the cheapest litter available, is grown on the farm and requires no outlay of cash. That good results can be had by using it is indisputable. The important thing about it is to use plenty—change it often.

Poultry Notes

A good lighting system in the poultry house increases the annual production of the birds.

Eggs from yearling hens are best for hatching, as breeding stock must be fully matured to obtain strong, healthy chicks.

The poultry industry is a sizable business, worthy of best efforts whether in research, teaching, production or marketing.

Hens should be kept housed in winter, but should have straw to scratch in, so they may exercise.

The upkeep of a flock of bantams, large or small, is about half the cost of a like amount of regular size poultry. They eat little more than a pigeon.

Ten per cent or more of the pullets can be culled from the flock at the end of the first laying season without materially affecting the number of eggs produced.

A BACK YARD SALAD

Back-yard picnics under the shady old elm call for a salad that is both spring-like and filling Potato chips there must be and all kinds of sandwiches, but the salad is really of prime importance

Here's one that's a lot of fun both to make and eat It's simply called Picnic Salad You may vary the proportions and some of the ingredients to suit yourself, but here are the most important of the latter Whole hard-cooked eggs small, whole tomatoes, peeled, a can of shrimps; whole radishes, lettuce cut coarsely, and mayonnaise If nobody objects, you might add some tender young green onions, slices of cucumber and chopped green peppers.

You simply toss the whole mixture together in a large salad bowl and carry it out to the picnic For picnics farther from home the eggs shrimp and mayonnaise may be carried in one container and the crisp vegetables in another for mixing just before the salad is to be eaten

Texas Exposition 150 Per Cent Over Original Size Plan

Chrysler Contract Puts Dallas World's Fair on Top in Motor Exhibits

DALLAS, Texas—The Texas Centennial Exposition today turned the home stretch toward its June 6 opening, two and one-half times larger than its sponsors originally anticipated.

From $10,000,000 value, estimated when the project was begun, the first World's Fair of the Southwest, has grown into a $25,000,000 affair, the steel framework of its construction jobs stretching down mile after mile of parallel courses

New Building Ordered

With the signing of the Chrysler Motor Corporation for a huge display space the Exposition boasts the largest motor exhibit ever shown at a World's Fair

Originally the $400,000 Hall of Transportation was intended to house exhibits of both transportation and petroleum industries.

So large was the space taken by Chrysler, however, that Exposition officials were forced to hurriedly realign their plans and build a separate Hall of Petroleum.

Ford with its own building, General Motors, with a huge, air-conditioned auditorium where changing shows of radio and stage stars will be presented in one-week engagements throughout the June 6-Nov. 29 Exposition period and Chrysler with an elaborate participation in the making, will give Dallas a record-breaking representation of the motor industry.

Livestock Also Featured

Further, the big fair will boast the largest livestock show ever assembled.

Other exhibits keep the pace, with the city display space at a premium and officials assured of an exhibit "sell-out" long before the opening day.

The City of Dallas, the State of Texas and the Federal government are keeping step with their important Exposition building programs.

W. A. Webb, general manager of the Exposition who holds an international reputation for his railroad construction work, has announced every building will be completed by the June 6 opening date.

The spirit of the Old West will be recreated at every turn.

In a city as metropolitan as any in the nation, the frontier days will live again.

Ten-Gallon Hats Epidemic

Ten-gallon hats are blooming on every corner. Service stations are garbing their attendants in the cowpuncher's regalia. Department stores are clothing their elevator girls in cowgirl uniforms similar to those of Exposition Rangerettes. Other stores are donating the big hats to their employes with instructions to wear them on all occasions.

Even the Exposition police will be in full Old West attire.

The Texas Rangers will have a camp on the Exposition Race Track, with a replica of an old Ranger bunkhouse as their headquarters.

Not a single detail has been overlooked by the Exposition chiefs in their efforts to make the Southwest's World's Fair the most colorful in history.

Canadian

Texas Centennial Exposition officials originally intended to have 48 Rangerettes on hostess duty when the $25,000,000 World's Fair opens in Dallas June 6. When they found one of those selected came from Washington, D. C., they included Mexico to make an even 50. Now, not to overlook Canada, they have appointed Grace Louise Bailey, daughter of a Dallas publisher and born in Ojibwa, Ontario, near Windsor, making a total of 51.

Rodeo Boss

Col. W. T. Johnson, of San Antonio, will take his world championship rodeo to the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas for engagements in June and September. The first will start June 6, opening day of the $25,000,000 World's Fair. Col. Johnson's rodeo is the one which has played in New York City's Madison Square Garden for the last five years.

10-Gallon Straw

[illegible] and straw hats but it took the Texas Centennial Exposition, $25,000,000 World's Fair opening in Dallas, June 6 to produce an authentic 10-gallon straw chapeau Lucy Ann Snell demonstrates the hat, made at Laredo, Texas, of Texas straw

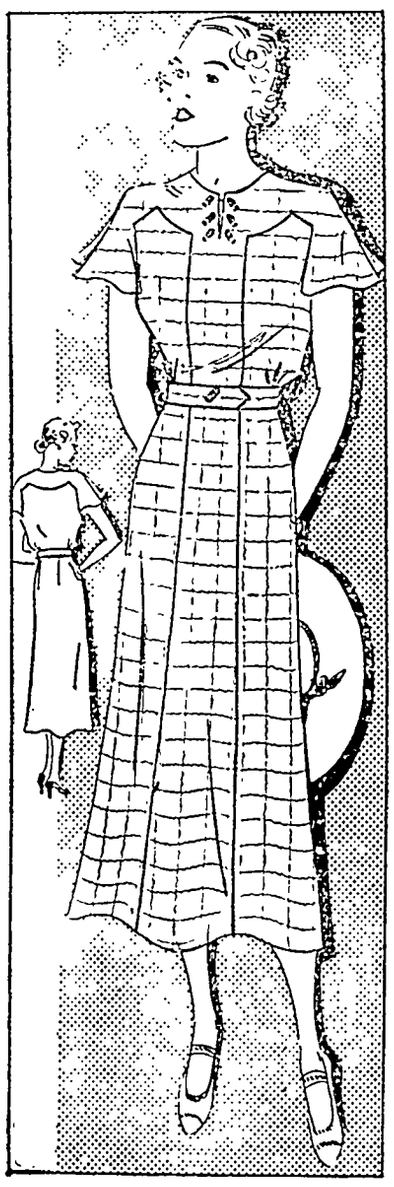
Simple Lines in This Exclusive Model, Which Is a Perfect Utility Frock



Pattern No. 1873-B

Checks in crepe, silk, pique, linen or cotton lead the way to chic in this easy, casual, day dress. While the design emphasizes smooth slim lines, comfortable fullness for the skirt is provided by a wide inset at the front.

The model cuts quickly and easily, with only seams to join at the sides, panel and waistline. No troublesome armholes to discourage amateur dressmakers, as the sleeves and shoulder line belong to "one family," and a slim waistline is assured the minute you insert the back darts. This is a perfect utility frock for a multitude of daytime needs. You can make it as a house frock, too—it's so simple and quick to launder and, being collarless, even easier to iron.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1873 B is available in sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42, and 44. Size 34 requires 4⅛ yards of 35 inch material. Send fifteen cents for the pattern.

The Barbara Bell Pattern Book featuring spring designs is ready. Send fifteen cents today for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

Italy Takes Addis Ababa; the Emperor Flees

EMPEROR HAILE SELASSIE of Ethiopia gave up the hopeless fight against the Italian invaders and fled from Addis Ababa with his family.

Haile Selassie

Mussolini's victorious troops soon after marched into the capital, the first to enter being a picked regiment representing all units of the Italian army, the Askari, infantry, artillery, air force, engineers, grenadiers, bersaglieri, Alpini, cavalry, marines and Fascist militiamen.

Their coming was welcomed by the foreigners who remained in the city, for as soon as the negus left, the natives began to pillage, plunder and burn. The business center of the town was speedily wrecked and the government buildings were stormed and ravaged, these including the treasury from which the state's store of gold was stolen, and the armory. The streets were strewn with corpses and the Ethiopians, crazed by liquor, rushed about shooting at random and gathering up their loot to carry it to the hills.

Only one foreigner was reported killed. That was Mrs. N. A. Stadin, American wife of an Adventist missionary, who was struck by a stray bullet. Nearly all other foreigners were gathered in the well fortified British legation, but American Minister Cornelius Van H. Eggert with his wife and the male members of the staff remained in the American compound. They were armed only with rifles and pistols and were under orders from Secretary of State Hull not to risk their lives uselessly; but they were determined to hold the legation and radio station as long as possible. This plucky little group was attacked repeatedly by marauders but repulsed all onslaughts. Mr. Engert was in wireless communication with Washington. The British legation offered to send a detachment of Sikhs to escort the Americans to the British compound, but Mr. Engert declined to leave his legation at that time. Next day he and his staff evacuated the compound.

Haile Selassie went by train to Djibouti, French Somaliland, and was received with all honors at the governor's palace. He and his family boarded the British cruiser Enterprise and sailed for Palestine.

At first it was rumored the French would hold him for a time, but later advices said the French and British governments had decided that he remained a sovereign and must have full liberty of movement.

So ends the military part of Mussolini's African adventure, a success despite the opposition of the League of Nations and the imposition of economic and financial penalties. The duce announced the victory to his country from the chamber of deputies and there was wild rejoicing throughout Italy. It is taken for granted Mussolini will set up an Amharic state in part of Ethiopia under a puppet emperor; and presumably Italy, France and Great Britain will get together and determine their respective zones of influence in the ancient empire. The humiliated league can do nothing except lift the existing sanctions, which proved futile in halting the war. British Foreign Minister Eden and his fellows in the government must admit as gracefully as possible their failure to check Mussolini and get what they can for Britain out of the African tragedy. France probably is not sorry over the outcome, for her opposition to the duce's ambitious scheme always was half-hearted.

Vandenberg's Name Is to Be Presented

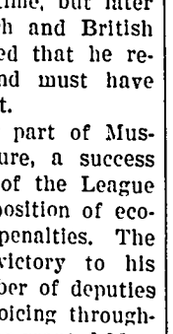
SENATOR ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG of Michigan has asked Gov. Frank D. Fitzgerald of that state to present his name to the Republican convention in Cleveland for the Presidential nomination, but the senator insists this does not make him an active candidate.



Senator Vandenberg

"The Michigan state convention generously instructed the Michigan delegation in Cleveland to present my name," the senator said. "But the delegation is unpledged—at my request. It is free to vote as it pleases. I have not sought a delegation here or elsewhere and I shall not do so. I have not sought the nomination and shall not do so. My situation is not changed in the slightest."

Friends of Senator Borah in Utah tried unsuccessfully for a Borah pledged delegation from that state. The Republican state convention in Ogden voted to send an uninstructed group to Cleveland, following the recommendation of the resolutious committee.

The Arkansas delegation also will be uninstructed, though the state convention approved an "expression of good will" toward Gov. Alf Landon.

Col. Henry Breckenridge, who offered himself to the Democrats as a Presidential nominee aspirant merely so that disaffected members of the party might have some place to go, received about one-seventh of the votes in the Maryland preference primary. The rest, of course, went to Mr. Roosevelt. Colonel Breckenridge had made no campaign.

Radicals Control French Chamber of Deputies

FINAL elections in France put complete control of the chamber of deputies in the hands of the revolutionary "Popular Front," a coalition of Communists, Socialists, Radical Socialists and minor left wing groups. The new chamber does not meet until June, and the confusion is so great that there are fears of chaos and financial panic in the interim. Many believe the Popular Front will be unable to form a stable government to succeed that of Premier Sarraut. The lead must be taken by the Socialists, for they now form the largest group in the chamber with 146 seats. The Radical Socialists have 115, the Communists 72 and minor left parties 44. The National bloc, including center and right parties opposed to the leftists, have 236 seats.

Senator Hastings Will Not Seek Re-election

DANIEL O. HASTINGS, senator from Delaware, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee and outspoken opponent of the New Deal, will not seek re-election when his present term expires. He so announced in a letter to the party leaders of his state, giving as his reason the necessity to devote himself to his law practice. This may have influenced his decision, but it is more than suspected that the real reason was the fact that the du Pont family, all-powerful in Delaware Republican politics, had decided that the senatorial seat should go to Gov. C. Douglas Buck, who is related to the du Ponts by marriage. Senator Hastings has always been ready and eloquent in defense of the du Ponts against attacks by the New Dealers.

Navy Expansion Measure Passed by the House

SINCE international naval disarmament efforts have failed, those who advocate adequate national defense rejoice in the passage by the house of the bill appropriating approximately $531,000,000 to build our navy up to treaty strength. Representative Marcantonio of New York and a few others put up loud opposition, but a record vote was not necessary. The objectors dwelt especially on a clause authorizing the laying of keels for two 35,000 ton battleships after January 1, 1937, should any foreign signatory to the London naval treaty start a battleship replacement program. Two days later they might have read dispatches from London saying rumors had reached there that Japan was considering laying down a 55,000 ton battleship armed with 21-inch guns.

Appropriations in the bill, along with other available funds, will give the navy a total of $592,237,807 for the next fiscal year, starting July 1.

Business Men Differ With Mr. Roper

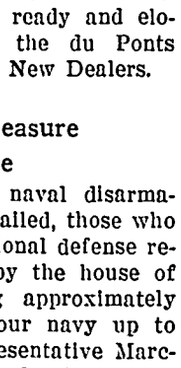
DANIEL C. ROPER, secretary of commerce, appeared before the Chamber of Commerce of the United States at its annual meeting in Washington and warned its members, most of whom are persistsent critics, of New Deal policies, that unless private enterprise takes up the slack in employment, business must pay the relief bill out of earnings.



Sec. Roper

"It is the responsibility of all business and industrial enterprises, said Roper, "and not of one particular segment of the government to increase its efforts for greater employment. If a substantial measure of increased re-employment does not take place the taxation for relief purposes will come largely from business earnings. There must be re-employment or a longer period of increased taxation."

Roper admitted that the administration had fostered bureaucracy, but insisted that it was occasioned by an emergency, and responsibility for its increase again lay at the door of private business.

Various members of the chamber replied spiritedly. Roy C. Osgood, vice president of the First National bank of Chicago, predicted that if the administration embarked on a sound fiscal program that would inspire confidence, business would make rapid strides toward recovery. He criticized the pending tax on corporate earnings as impracticable and a brake on business expansion and stability.

Huge New Tax Measure Rushed Through House

WITH extraordinary speed w the opposition considered i cent, the administration's new $ 000,000, revenue bill was pu through the house. The vote, 267 to 93, was almost strictly along party lines. The roll call showed 82 Republicans and only 11 Democrats voted against the measure, while four Republicans deserted the minority to cast their lot with the administration.

Sen. Harri

The bill was handed to the senate whose finance committee, headed by Pat rison, had been studying it in se cessions in order to be prepared the public hearings that opened days after the house had acted. T had been predictions that this com tee would modify the measure rad ly, but the opposition to it in D cratic ranks seemed to have f away and its passage by the se without material change was dee probable.

As passed by the house the bill vides:

1. A graduated tax on corpora income which, it is estimated, force distribution of $3,360,00 more in dividends and yield the ernment an additional $620,000,00 nually.

2. A "windfall" tax on unpaid o funded processing taxes imposed u the invalidated AAA, which is ex ed to yield $100,000,000.

3. Continuation of the capital st and excess profits taxes for six mo to yield $35,000,000.

4. A refund of $35,000,000 to pr sors who suffered financial losses der the old AAA.

The chamber of commerce meeting brought forth the information that business, as a whole, had kept hundreds of thousands of workers on its collective pay rolls during the depression when conditions did not justify their retention. The claim was advanced that business had expended something like twenty billions in wages paid from stored-up reserves. It was further asserted that business was alone responsible for such gains toward recovery as have been made.

Business Has Answer

New Deal spokesmen, from President Roosevelt on down, have consistently accused business of failure to take on workers and help solve the unemployment problem. At the same time, the banking structure of the country has been accused chiefly by the President of refusal to extend credit to business, and business as a whole has been classified by the President as greedy.

It seems safe to say that as regards these charges, business does have an answer, for throughout all history capital has refused to work unless there was a reasonable promise of return. Now, in addition to the lack of that promised return, business is and has been constantly confronted with uncertainties on the part of the New Deal. The present pending tax legislation is typical. The most dangerous provision of that legislation is that which will prevent business from building up reserves such as those upon which it has been drawing during the depression.

If the business claim is true that it has paid out twenty billions more than its operations justified for wages during the depression, it causes one to ponder over the future. One is inclined to ask what strength business will have to do even as much for the working classes during the next depression as it has done in this one.

With reference to the New Deal policies toward business, a statement by the Rural Electrification administration has just come to my desk. It touches on that very delicate question of how far the government can enter into business in competition with private enterprise without destroying or driving out private initiative. The complaint on the part of private business that the government is continually wedging its way into private fields is well known but the REA statement puts something of a new slant on the view. In fact, it brings to the front one of the elements of government in business not generally recognized.

Delicate Question

The REA statement consists of a letter from REA Administrator Morris Cooke to the State Corporation Commission of Virginia. The Virginia commission was urged to consider the situation in which the REA and one of its loans will be placed in event of a certain ruling by the Virginia officials. In effect, Administrator Cooke asked the Virginia commission to rule against private business in order that a $366,000 loan made by REA to a co-operative organization in Virginia can be protected.

To review the facts briefly, let me explain that a private electric company applied to the Virginia commission for authority to extend its lines for transmission of energy into a farming section adjacent to cities served by the electric company. It happened that the REA had sent agents into this same territory and had obtained promises from many farmers to buy electricity from a co-operative concern to be organized and financed by REA. The private company apparently horned in to what Mr. Cooke thought was the territory of REA by right of discovery or some other such reason, and so he is now engaged in attempting at least to prevent the private company from entering that field.

The point of this circumstance is that here is a federal agency, steeped in bureaucracy and with the usual bureaucratic thirst for power, which actually is attempting to drive private industry out of its way. It is doing it under the thinly disguised reason of protecting a government loan.

I have heard considerable discussion of this case. Many observers and students of economic questions contend that the federal government has absolutely no right to engage in that sort of business. While it may be, and probably can be, said that the electric company was attempting to take the cream of the crop by extending its lines only to territory adjacent to its headquarters, the fact remains that the normal re-employment which that private company would do will be cut down proportionately by the extension of the federal activities into that area. It may appear that the workers displaced for the private company will be taken on by the federally financed co-operative lines but such is not the case. It is just one more indication of how government, once it enters private business, continues to expand and to destroy initiative which private enterprise has and which government never has been known to have.

One King Dead. Next?

Hitler Picks Successor
Three Kinds of Gold

King Fuad, King of Egypt, dead means nothing to 130,000,000 Americans or to 15,000,000,000 other human beings on earth. It means much to England, real ruler of Egypt, now obliged to find another king to "behave himself, do as England says," and hold down Egypt's anti-British hatred.

Arthur Brisbane

A mob seized Lint Shaw, fifty-year-old negro, and lynched him on "the usual charge," not waiting for a trial.

Joe Bowers, sentenced to 25 years for mail robbery, locked in the island fortress of Alcatraz, tried to escape by climbing ten feet of plain wire, two feet of barbed wire, and jumping down a 60-foot cliff into the water. He climbed while sharpshooter guards pumped bullets into him, and jumped down the cliff. Asked when "booked" at Alcatraz, "Who is to be notified if you die?" Bowers replied: "Nobody; nobody cares whether I die or not."

Hitler apparently has chosen his successor "in case." In the person of Air Minister Goering, now made "assistant dictator," with control of two great German problems of raw materials and foreign exchange.

In New York, 175 naval cadets from the German cruiser Emden, name well remembered from the war, explore the city, guarded by detectives in case of hostile demonstrations.

Commercial boycotts of Germany, organized in New York, have done more harm to the Nazi government than could be done by any mob attack on German cadets.

California possesses "three kinds of gold": yellow gold, of which there is plenty left in the ground; "black gold," which is the oil in lakes thousands of feet down, and the "white gold," water from the mountains, first used to develop power, then to irrigate crops.

Another gold, more important than those three, combined, is the gold of education.

Driving through this country, if you see a particularly fine building, tall columns, wide grounds, fields for healthy play, that is a public school. Once it would have been the prison or feudal castle.

You see another building, almost as impressive as the high school. That is a public library. The accumulated knowledge of the world is free.

Mrs. Grace Warren Dubois, sixty-two years old, was allowed to keep her seat while the judge sentenced her to life imprisonment for killing her son. Ordinarily convicts must stand for sentence.

It is said she thought her family "too aristocratic" to live in such times as these, and wished to kill them all. Another son testified against her.

Newsboys cry "What do you read?" The Niagara of books pouring from the presses, a vast majority forgotten as they are born, make many ask "What shall I read?" Of the books that every one must know, many are unnecessarily long, will not be read, and need condensation, in this day of newspapers, moving pictures, and radio.

If some publisher would issue a "bookshelf" squeezed down from 12 feet to 2 feet, that would be useful.

Paris perceives that following recent elections extreme radicals will be powerful in the new chamber, and those that have money left begin panicky selling. Bank of France shares drop violently, meaning lack of confidence in government stability, with fear of war in all minds.

The last war knocked the franc from 19 cents to 4 cents. What would another war do?

When stock gambling starts, it moves rapidly. Since March last year, stock prices have gone up 60 per cent, business has increased 18 per cent, employment only 5 per cent. Not much cheerfulness in that.

Since last March the New York Stock exchange "values" have increased by twenty thousand million dollars. Excellent "bait" for the ignorant.

New Jersey citizens dropped from relief invade legislative halls, camp out, sleep on the floor, promise to remain until New Jersey supplies money and food.

Ewing township, New Jersey, with 9,000 population, taking 450 families off the dole, told them officially to go out and beg. Begging being illegal, each family was provided with a begging license. That may be called "economic relief."

Tokyo worries about Russia "plotting a war against Japan," but no plotting is necessary. Russia knows the location of every Japanese city, town and factory. It would be necessary only to declare war and start dropping bombs, particularly bombs that spread fire.

Starting a war for foreign countries is as easy as "shooting up a gambling game" among our racketeers; no secrecy or plotting necessary.

Hello Everybody!

"April Fool's Tragedy"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU'VE all heard about the girl who plays a man like a fish on a line. Well, here's a case where that situation was reversed. Distinguished Adventurer Patricia Root, of New York city, has come here to tell the story of how a man once played her like a fish on a line.

What's more, Pat Root isn't a bit sore about it. As a matter of fact, she's darned grateful to the guy. She would have died if he hadn't—well—sort of made a sucker out of her. Fish lines can be pretty tough on fish, but this one meant life to Patricia.

It happened on April Fool's day in 1933—and you can forget about the date, because there's no fooling about this adventure. Pat was visiting in the Virgin Islands, way down in the West Indies, and as our story opens, she and five other people were starting out to go tarpon fishing.

"But not tarpon fishing as most people picture it," says Pat. "We set out in a boat from the island of St. Thomas to Thatch Cay, a small key about a mile off shore. But there we left the boat, for we were going to do our fishing from the shore."

Pat Began Tarpon Fishing From a Rocky Ledge.

Pat was just fifteen at the time. The others were older. There was John and his wife, Maria, Carl, and two native Virgin islanders, Wilmot and Paul. They crossed the key to a spot where a high cliff ran right down into the sea. There was a little ledge at the base of the cliff just big enough for one person to fish from. And there they fished for the big, hundred-pound fighting tarpon, taking turns with the line down there on that narrow ledge.

It was late afternoon before it came Pat's turn to fish. She clambered down to the ledge and was a bit frightened at the way the waves boiled up, almost to the spot where she was standing.

Says she: "We should never have gone fishing that day. There was a ground sea running and a ground sea has a peculiar motion. None of us had noticed that the ocean was getting rougher. At least, I didn't, until I turned to look up at the others sitting on the top of the cliff and suddenly found myself engulfed in water."

She Was Washed Into the Shark Infested Sea.

A huge wave had leapt up and flooded the ledge Pat was standing on. Before she could catch herself she was washed off into the deep water. "For the moment," she says, "I didn't realize the terrible hopelessness of my position. I heard a splash beside me and saw Wilmot come to the surface. He had jumped from the top of the cliff.

"Wilmot put an arm around me and swam with me toward the ledge. We reached it—clutched to it desperately—but neither of us could climb the sheer, precipitous side of the rock wall that led to it. It was only then that I realized that we couldn't get back on shore again."

Again and again, Wilmot carried Pat to the cliffside, but each time the dashing waves washed them back. Wilmot's strength was beginning to fail him, but he still labored frantically. He knew what Pat didn't—that there were sharks in those waters and there wasn't a moment to lose.

Fishing for Human Lives in Storm Swept Waters.

At length, as he reached the ledge for the last time, a wave washed him upon it, but by that time he was too weak to pull Pat after him. She was washed back out to sea while Wilmot, totally exhausted, lay on the ledge until Carl came down and carried him to the top of the cliff.

While Carl was carrying Wilmot back to the clifftop, John, down on the ledge, was trying to reach Pat's outstretched hands. A moment later another wave carried him off into the water, too.

The waves were now rising so high that it was dangerous to stand on the ledge. But Carl tried it. No sooner had he carried Wilmot to the top of the cliff than he started down again, this time with a strong tarpon line in his hand. He tossed that into the water. John caught it and looped it around Pat. "It got twisted around my neck," Pat says, "and for a moment I just hung there. A wave covered me and the line fell off. When I came up, I caught it again and twisted it around my finger."

And then began the queerest bit of life-saving yon ever saw. Up on the ledge stood Carl, fishing rod in his hand, slowly bringing Pat in toward shore as if she were a fish. That line wasn't strong enough to sustain her weight, so Carl "played" her—reeling in as she rose on the crest of a wave, and letting the line out as she fell again.

The Waves Finally Tossed Her Up to Safety.

Minutes passed while this strange game went on. Pat began to wonder if Carl would ever get her ashore. She was sore and bruised where the waves had dashed her body against the rocks. The thin line wrapped around her hand was all but cutting her fingers in two. "I was beginning to bleed from my arms," she says, "when I heard John shout for help three times. Then there came a long silence. I didn't know it then, but John was done for. A shark had gotten him."

More minutes passed. Pat was gasping for breath—ready to faint from the torture of that cutting line. Then Carl took a desperate chance. Shouting to her to keep up her courage he began to reel in the line. Inch by inch she neared the ledge. It was almost within her reach—she had her hand on it. Then, at the crucial moment, a wave came to her rescue and washed her bodily up on the ledge.

Carl carried her back to the top of the cliff, bruised, exhausted and covered with blood. "Since that day," says Pat, "I have forgotten the real meaning of April Fool's day. To me it has become the anniversary of an awful tragedy."

February Called Cabbage Month; Later Sun Month

The ancient Saxons called February Sproutkale, or the Sprouting of the Cabbage. Later, this was changed to Sunmonath, or sunmonth, because it was at this period that daylight increased and the pruning of trees began.

The word February comes from the Latin, "februare," meaning "to expiate," because, during this month the Roman ceremony of purification took place. Originally, it was the last month of the year, and not until 452 B. C. did February assume its present place.

When Julius Caesar reformed the calendar, he gave 31 days to each alternate month from January, and 30 to the others, with the exception of February, which got 30 in leap year and 29 every other year. But when Augustus took power, he was unwilling that the month named after him should be shorter than those on either side, so he took a day from February and added it to August. So that three months of 31 days should not run consecutively, he reversed the other two.

Must Think First

"Mr. Goudy, the great typographer, when he was asked how he designed a new font of type, brooded a while and then he said, 'Why, you think of a letter and draw around it.' But whatever method the writer adopts, or finds forced upon him, his first problem is to teach himself to think; and to find audience which is hospitable to thought."—Christopher Morley.

REMODELING AT EDITOR'S HOME RESULTS IN MUCH LARGER ROOM

The Editor has caught some of the remodeling and building "fever" which seems prevalent in Klemme this spring and so a partition between the dining room and sun-room of the Jorgenson home has been removed which makes the two rooms into one large room about 14x26 Then painters Lawhorn and Smid completed the remodeling by repainting the walls in the new room and the living room New woodwork was also put in the dining room. The final results are real pleasing to the Editor and family.

Baggs Again Named County Superintendent

BAGGS IS AGAIN NAMED AS SUPERINTENDENT OF HANCOCK CO. SCHOOLS

Has Completed Twenty-Five Years Service As Head of County Schools

At the meeting of representatives of school boards from all over the county John R. Baggs was again elected county superintendent of schools for a three year term Mr Baggs has served as superintendent continuously for the past twenty-five years.

In Wright County C W Sankey of Belmond, former publisher of the Belmond Independent, was elected superintendent of schools Miss Hazel Thomas, superintendent of the Belmond school for the past three years, and prior to that time principal for thirteen years, was elected as county superintendent of schools of Cerro Gordo county to succeed Mrs. Pearl Tanner.

METEORITE SEEN FALLING BY FARMER NEAR BELMOND

The Belmond Independent reports an unusual story in their issue last week when they told of a twelve pound meteorite falling on the farm of Guy Lynch at three o'clock in the afternoon. Lynch was planting corn when he heard a loud whistle and he saw something fall about one hundred feet in front of him. Lynch got off the planter and walked to where he saw the object fall. The rock was still hot and caused steam to arise from the ground where it buried itself. After it had cooled off he carried it to his farm The meteorite is granite in color, eighteen inches long, blunt on one end and rather sharp at the other end.

Victory Sunday At Klemme M. E. Church

The Klemme Methodist Episcopal church will observe next Sunday, May 24th as "Victory Sunday" with services all day, celebrating the payment of the balance of the debt on the church building

This beautiful church, which was built six years ago, was dedicated with pledges sufficient to cover the indebtedness, but as financial conditions became worse many were unable to meet their pledges

For the past five years a little has been paid each year Last December a quiet canvas was made to raise the last $2,100.00 By January 1st the amount was pledged and in February of this year the last of the debt was paid There have been no advances made by some individuals for others' pledges as is so often done in one financial campaigns, and churches claim they are free from debt when their debt is merely underwritten or money advanced by a few of the more able ones

The pastor with the Board of Trustees wish to take this opportunity to thank all those who have helped in any way to make this celebration possible

Every organization of the Church is working splendidly and the Sunday morning audiences will vouch for this The program for next Sunday is as follows:

Worship Service 10 a m Dr Muhleman will preach
Sabbath School 11 a m Classes for all
Basket dinner following Sunday School (Bring 2 covered dishes, one a meat dish and sandwiches)
Platform Service 2:30 p m Several short talks will be made at this service and the burning of the mortgages and old notes will take place
Evening Service 8:00 p m Rev. Whyte will preach
Special music at all services

Liberty church is joining us in the celebration, so we urge every member of the Klemme and Liberty churches to be present at all the services and a cordial invitation is extended to all others Even should it be raining the joy of the celebration will not be dampened It's another "Red-letter Day" for our church and community

Free Talking Pictures Will Be Summer Entertainment Feature

MISS MILDRED GAST AND KENNETH ZWALD WILL TAKE MARRIAGE VOWS THIS EVE

At the home of Mr. and Mrs. Herman Gast tonight at seven o'clock will occur the marriage of their daughter, Miss Mildred Marie to Mr Kenneth Zwald

A wedding dinner will be served to immediate relatives and a few close friends of the contracting couple

The young couple will reside on a farm two and a half miles west of Klemme, where the groom began farming this spring.

Complete details of this happy event will be published in the Times next week.

M. E. CHURCH MEMBERS PRESENTED GIFT TO MRS. JOHN MUENCHOW

At the morning services Sunday at the Methodist church Mrs John Muenchow was presented with an Irish linen table cloth and a set of twelve napkins to match. The gift was presented in recognition of Mrs Muenchow's faithful work in the church for several years as pianist. Rev. Zabilka presented the gift which was gracefully accepted by the former Miss Georga Ford.

Brides-to-Be Are Honored At Showers

PRE-NUPTIAL SHOWER GIVEN IN HONOR OF MISS ETHEL BAACK

The Misses Norma Baack and Clarice Wellemeyer were hostesses to a number of young ladies who met at the Wellemeyer home last Friday evening where a pre-nuptial shower and party was given in honor of Miss Ethel Baack, who has announced her approaching marriage to Mr. Caris Kropp.

The entertainment consisted of games and a treasure hunt in which clues led to hiding places of the gifts for the honor guest.

Lunch was served after a social time was enjoyed.

Standard Bearers Honor Miss Gast

The Standard Bearers of the Liberty church gave a shower in honor of Miss Mildred Gast Saturday afternoon. About 30 were present and enjoyed the program which included a mock wedding, with Mildred Schoenwetter as the groom, Velda Schaefer, the bride; and Lucille Stille, the preacher. Advice and recipes were given. The society presented Miss Gast with a white linen table cloth. Refreshments were served.

M. E. Choir Has Party For Pianist Thursday Evening

Following the regular rehearsal of the Methodist Choir last Thursday evening they gave a party in honor of Mrs. John Muenchow (formerly Miss Georga Ford) who has been pianist for the choir for several years. Refreshments were served and Mrs. Muenchow was presented with a gift from the choir members.

Paving Nearly Finished Here

POURING OF CONCRETE ON PAVING PROJECT COMPLETED SATURDAY

Grading And Shoulders Complete New Highway Into Klemme

Contractor Carlson and his paving crew completed the job of pouring concrete Saturday and the cement work on the new paved highway No 179 is now completed.

Part of the paving crew will be kept busy for some time in doing grading work and building shoulders on the new cement road The curing process also requires some time and the new cement is kept covered with dirt and kept soaked down with water for several days.

We are just guessing, but we believe the road will be open for traffic about Memorial Day.

M. E. Ladies Aid Meeting Will Be This Week Thursday

The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church will meet this week Thursday afternoon at the church parlors. Mrs. John Etchen, Mrs. Lloyd Lau, Mrs. John Neuberger and Mrs. Harry Pringnitz are the hostesses.

HIGH SCHOOL MANUAL ARTS DISPLAY AT THADA'S STORE

There are a number of pieces of furniture, including hall trees, foot stools, small tables, corner shelves, tie holders and other articles made by Mr. Kingery's class of boys in the manual arts department of the high school this past year, which are now on display at the Thada store.

STARTLING FACTS ON CRIME IN THE UNITED STATES

J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the federal bureau of investigation, gave out last week some startling facts, a few of which we here mention.

150,000 murderers are roaming at large in this country.

"Political grafters" are the brain behind the Dillingers of this land.

Three hundred thousand citizens of America are today walking our streets not realizing they are doomed to die by the foul hand of the murderer.

In addition to the 150,000 murderers he said were now at large, he declared 200,000 of the present population will commit murder before they die.

Even beyond the country's three million convicted criminals, he asserted one out of 25 persons in the United States is "inclined toward criminality."

In this country there are annually: 12,000 murders; 46,981 felonious assaults; 283,685 burglaries; 779,956 larcenies; 247,346 automobile thefts.

"In every large American city, there is attorney after attorney who makes his living by counseling men he knows to be guilty . . often he plans with them.

"It is a national disgrace that the average murderer serves only four years.

"Sentimentalists brought about the beautiful system of traveling bands for convicts, football games for convicts, tennis courts for convicts, radios in the prison block and newspapers in every cell."

LIBERTY TEACHERS HELD PICNICS LAST SCHOOL DAY

Mildred Gast held a picnic dinner and a short program last Wednesday to which all patrons of her school were invited. Mothers and scholars then held a surprise kitchen shower on Miss Gast. She was made to sit at her desk and then two girls entered carrying a basket trimmed in blue and white, and which was filled with presents.

Miss Ruth Abele, teacher in No. 4 dist., held a picnic dinner Thursday evening to which all the patrons were invited.

Miss Viola Koehler, teacher in Dist. No. 2 closed a successful year of school Friday with a picnic dinner to which everyone was invited.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart

National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—With the national convention of the Republicans only a week away, New Deal strategists are bending every effort toward a program designed to make a knock-down and drag-out fight of that session. It is not disclosing any secret to say that the New Dealers are using this weapon up to the hilt because disruption of the Republican party would make victory easy for Candidate Roosevelt.

Seek to Dicrupt G. O. P.

Predictions in politics always are perilous. Governor Alf M. Landon of Kansas seems to be in the lead at this time for the Republican nomination, but there are many observers throughout the country who contend that the "Kansas Coolidge" cannot win, and that various other aspirants for the nomination, men whose hats are in the ring, likewise must be counted out. This is to say that a feeling is growing that a dark horse will be nominated.

From the strictly Washington viewpoint, which may be different than elsewhere in the country, astute political observers are convinced that there must be a swift change in sentiment to keep the nomination away from Governor Landon. Yet, it must be said that politics is fraught with just such things and so it is entirely possible that the Republican nominee may be someone other than the present apparent leader in the race.

Those who feel that Governor Landon will be the nominee claim he has played his cards well. But others insist that the Kansas governor made a bad mistake in allowing his name to be linked with the Hearst faction in California. Indeed, I have heard comment that this fact alone will defeat Governor Landon.

It has been interesting to observe the maneuvers of the New Deal strategists with reference to the Landon boom. Some observers contend that the efforts being put forth from New Deal quarters in an attempt to discredit Governor Landon were being engineered because the New Deal fears Governor Landon as a Roosevelt opponent more than it fears some of the other candidates for the nomination. Frank R. Kent, the Washington commentator for the Democratic Baltimore Sun, asserted that the New Deal activity against Landon's nomination constituted "the best evidence of the increasing probability" of the Kansas governor's nomination. Mr. Kent did not say that which some other informed writers feel, namely, that the Landon candidacy would mean a bitter campaign on the part of the Roosevelt forces to re-elect the President. Nevertheless, it has been interesting to note the various ways in which Roosevelt spokesmen and Democratic publicity men have been trying to show the country that Governor Landon is not the man who should be nominated.

New Deal Strategy

I have no quarrel with these efforts. It is the game of politics. Virtually anything goes. It is to be assumed that present Republican maneuvers will be concentrated in a few weeks on Mr. Roosevelt personally as the Democratic candidate. In fact, one hears expressions around Washington that for the first time in Mr. Roosevelt's political career, he is going to be directly under fire.

Just in this connection, one can recall that through most of the New Deal administration, criticism of New Deal policies and plans, almost without exception, was directed at Roosevelt appointees. The President himself has been exceptionally free from the type of personal attack that frequently characterizes political opposition. He has had absolutely none of the kind of criticism that occurred in the Hoover administration and was directed at Herbert Hoover, personally.

So, as we look at the campaign picture just ahead of the Republican convention and only a month in advance of the meeting of the Democrats at Philadelphia where President Roosevelt will be renominated, without opposition in his own party, I think it can be said without fear of contradiction that both candidates this year are going to be smeared personally just as fast and as long as the ammunition holds out.

While we are talking about the forthcoming quadrennial conventions, the two keynote speakers naturally enter into any discussion. Senator Alben W. Barkley of Kentucky will do the keynoting for the Democrats at Philadelphia and Senator Frederick Steiwer of Oregon will deliver the main address to the Cleveland convention of the Republicans. Senator Barkley was the keynoter at the Chicago convention when Mr. Roosevelt was nominated by the Democrats four years ago and, although it is a subject not freely discussed, it is said in high places that Mr. Roosevelt wanted the same man to do the job again, believing the Kentuckian to be an omen of good luck.

The Keynoters

The selection of Senator Steiwer was one of those things that can be said to be a surprise and yet not a surprise. He is, without doubt, a good man for the job. Yet in some quarters there is a conviction that Senator Steiwer was picked by the so-called "Old Guard" of eastern Republicans. Some observers still hold the belief that the selection of Senator Steiwer was not wholly pleasing to the Landon forces but be that as it may, there has been no particular ill feeling created by it. If it represents a piece of strategy by the eastern Republicans who were dealing with their problem by remote control, they apparently have played into the hands of the more liberal wing of Republicans. It is being predicted rather freely that the Oregon senator's keynote speech will lean strongly to the liberal side but that it will stress sound economics.

The best advance information obtainable on Senator Barkley's plans is that he will devote the bulk of his time on the convention platform to a review of Roosevelt accomplishments in the belief that such a review will take his presentation out of the class of a "defense" speech. Those with whom I have talked concerning the Barkley speech believe he has adopted a smart political course; that he feels there is no need to defend anything that has been done and that the record itself is the thing upon which the Democratic party can make a plea for re-election of Mr. Roosevelt.

Having observed Senator Barkley in action in the senate for a number of years, I believe I am justified in saying that he is a square shooter and a fighter. In this respect, he and Senator Steiwer, the Republican keynoter, are much the same type of man and, therefore, if either convention gets off on a wrong foot, the fault will lie with the convention managers rather than with the proposals offered by the men who are supposed to lay before the delegates a rough outline of their respective party's campaign policies.

Concerning the record of the keynoters in the senate, each stands four-square. Senator Barkley has consistently battled in behalf of the President and New Deal policies throughout Mr. Roosevelt's administration. Senator Steiwer has been just as consistent in his opposition. Certainly, Senator Steiwer has been much more outspoken against New Deal policies than most of his Republican colleagues, and much more so than Senator McNary.

For many months Washington has heard the plaint of business leaders who wanted to fight socialistic schemes and unsound economic policies given birth by New Deal brain trusters but were afraid to do so because of "retaliation." Almost constantly, information has filtered into Washington to the effect that if a corporation undertook to oppose New Deal plans vigorously, there was danger that some agency of the government would "crack down" on them. Much of this information has been taken by Washington observers with a grain of salt but a different aspect has been placed on the situation lately.

Fear 'Crack Down'

It was in the senate that a New Deal Democrat, Senator Homer T. Bone of Washington, broke loose with statements that seemed to substantiate the fear voiced so frequently by business. Senator Bone charged that there was a veritable and "budding OGPU" organized within the government. The OGPU, as most persons realize, is the secret spy system of the Russian Soviet and I think no one in this country has a complete knowledge of its vicious character. So, when Senator Bone likened the espionage system in our government to the OGPU, he was making, to my mind, one of the most serious charges yet leveled at the Roosevelt administration.

Of course, Senator Bone was attacking this espionage system because of a feeling that it might be used to coerce members of congress and even executive or administrative officers of the government who were opposed to plans propagated by Presidential advisers. His thought obviously concerned the political phases of such a system, but the fact that he brought the matter to public attention serves, in a measure, certainly, to substantiate some of the claims that business interests have made.

I am unable, however, to reconcile Senator Bone's position respecting the OGPU which he charged was in operation within the government and his utter silence when the obnoxious senate lobby committee, headed by Senator Black, Democrat, of Alabama, engaged in the wholesale seizure of private telegrams. It will be recalled that I reported in these columns how Senator Black and agents of the Federal Communications commission went into the files of the Western Union Telegraph company and carried off literally thousands of private telegrams. I was convinced then and I repeat it now that the Black seizure was nothing more than an attempt to dig up dirt on anybody against whom they could find discrediting information. Yet, Senator Bone, by his silence, condoned that course only to denounce later the systems of so-called "inspectors" used by Secretary Ickes of the Department of the Interior and reputedly by several other agencies of the government. I can only hope that if Senator Bone's charges are true that the usual condition will result, namely, that there will be other spies to spy on these spies.

Mussolini Goes Through Practical Selassie
Snake Killed One
Which End of the Gun?

Mussolini's men entered Addis Ababa, driving out the Ethiopian looters, bringing safety to various foreigners, including our own minister.

Arthur Brisbane

Rome went wild with joy; and no wonder.

In seven months Mussolini has conquered Ethiopia's millions, killing and wounding 250,000 of them, marching steadily ahead through dangerous valleys and high mountains, driving out the Ethiopian armies, that were directed by skilled soldiers from Turkey, Scandinavia and elsewhere.

Those impressed by the high qualities of Ethiopia's Arab slave-trading ruler will note that in the great crisis his presence of mind remained. The Associated Press says he took with him on the British boat "the imperial family jewels, many cases of gold bullion and gold coins." On his way from Addis Ababa to the British ship he stopped to take all the cash from the treasury and customs house at Diredawa.

In Florida, a well-meaning preacher, who thought it his duty to let rattlesnakes bite him to show the power of God, actually did let the snakes bite him without first removing their fangs. He is dead, the jury said, "by the bite of a rattlesnake through his own carelessness."

The poor fanatic succeeded only in proving the power of rattlesnake poison. The laws of the universe could hardly be suspended to justify the whim of one well-meaning fanatic.

It makes a difference, even to the No. 1 Public Enemy, "I'll-never-be taken-alive" bandit, which way the gun is pointed. Mr. Karpis is taken, much alive, with no struggle, beyond holding a straw hat over his face to baffle photographers.

Much efficiency in cash rewards; Dillinger defied all the "G-men"; a reward was offered, and a red-haired lady delivered him to the "G-men" bullets, and got $5,000.

Whether the $7,000 reward offered for Karpis tempted some friend of that courageous one remains to be seen.

The criminal is in business for money, and when he can sell a friend for $5,000, that seems preferable to risking his own life. The reward system should be extended; $5,000 reward for evidence resulting in arrest and conviction of any murderer.

The Carnegie Institute announces a "new law of matter" having to do with the "cohesion of infinitesimal particles of matter within the atom."

If it were not for that law, according to scientists, "the universe would consist of nothing but light hydrogen gas." That should interest politicians, who, after the big conventions, will live, until November, in a universe consisting of something lighter than "light hydrogen gas."

England's new king, Edward the Eighth, is said to be engaged to marry the Princess Alexandrine Louise of Denmark, twenty-one years old, the English king's third cousin.

The uncle of the young lady says he and her father know nothing of it. Nevertheless, it is difficult to believe that King Edward will remain a bachelor, whether he marries this charming young princess or some other, possibly a good healthy young Scotch girl, if one available could be found.

Dr. Walter Emerson Briggs, who teaches dentistry in Tufts college, says "women can take any kind of pain without a whimper."

Women endure pain more courageously than men. Childbirth has taught them to suffer and endure in isolation. Man shows his heroism preferably in crowds, in squadrons, platoons; often he would not do that if it did not take more courage to stay behind alone than to go ahead with the others.

Women's is the courageous sex, man is the other kind and might as well admit it.

The only certain immortality is represented by our children left behind to work on this earth. It must be of great interest to provide a child to fill a throne and rule the world's greatest empire—whether or not it lasts.

Two misguided Mexicans decided to ring bells of the ancient mission church at Juarez, Mexico, to celebrate the nomination of a National Revolutionary candidate for governor of Chihuahua. The pious ladies of Juarez thought those old bells should not be rung for any revolutionary candidate, and it became necessary for troops to rescue the bellringers from the infuriated women, giving a good imitation of Euripides man-hunting Bacchae.

When women start they mean it.

BRICKBAT THROUGH WINDOW IS NEEDED

Would Solve Most Problems in Poultry Housing.

By W. A. Foster, Agriculture Department, University of Illinois.—WNU Service.

Bad as poultry housing conditions are, a brick-bat through the window is all that is needed to solve the trouble in some cases. However, even the brick-bat cure will not work if it does not break out enough glass to let in the minimum need of fresh air, he said.

Some poultry houses are so bad that fresh air only filters in through the cracks, while in other houses all the fresh air that ever gets in is what comes through the door when the operator enters or leaves. Too much fresh air makes a cold, drafty house, and too little air movement causes a foul smelling, stuffy, soggy house. Neither condition is favorable to health or good egg production.

The open front house, with intelligent control, takes care of most weather conditions in Illinois. A long roll curtain of muslin or burlap will prevent drafts and still allow fresh air to filter in. This curtain rolled on a rug pole or clothes line prop may be rolled up or down and suspended in any size opening by a pair of light ropes at each end. The fabric must be cleaned frequently to remove the dust so the air can filter through.

Another method of closing the open front is to make a set of frames similar to screen frames to fit the opening, cover them with muslin and hinge them at the top like a cellar sash. While the muslin will clog with dust, these sashes are convenient and easily closed where necessary. Completely closing the open front with glass or other material through which the air cannot pass causes a foul condition in the house. When sub-normal temperatures are predicted, there is a strong temptation to close the house to keep it warm. This usually results in moisture which increases from day to day and makes the house damp and cold.

Only Few Poor Birds Affect Crate Prices

Poultry commission merchants in Chicago are calling attention of shippers to the importance of shipping only good quality birds to market. If a crate of chickens contains a few birds of poor quality, the price of the whole crate will be affected and will be considerably lower than it would be if all the birds were of uniformly good quality.

When dressed poultry is shipped it is important that it be dressed in good shape, for feathery, over-scalded, bruised or discolored poultry will bring a poor price even though it may have been well fattened. It is important that dressed poultry be thoroughly cooled before being packed for shipment. It should not, however, be chilled or frozen.

Thin poultry, either live or dressed, should be kept at home. Remember in loading poultry for shipment that appearance is a large factor in selling. Therefore, have the birds uniformly graded, keep the good birds together, and keep the poor birds at home to sell on some local market where they will not discount the price of all the rest of your shipment.

As a rule, the commission men do the best they can to get good prices for your poultry, but they ask for your co-operation in order that they may be able to get these prices.

Cull Non-Producers

Low producing birds generally are kept at a loss rather than a profit, so it is important to cull out these birds and the non-producers as soon as they can be identified. The pullets which are to become the high producers start to lay early. These may be banded and should constitute the breeding flock when pullets are used for breeders. Late maturing birds, not in production, should be dressed for market. During the year, there will be individuals that will go out of production from time to time. They should be dressed for market, in order to reduce feed costs.

Monument to Hen

In Little Compton, R. I., there is a monument to the Rhode Island Red, the first and only monument erected to a hen. The inscription on the tablet reads: "To commemorate the birthplace of the Rhode Island Red breed of fowl which originated near this location. Red fowls were bred extensively by the farmers of this district and later named Rhode Island Reds and brought into national prominence by the poultry fanciers. This tablet is placed by the Rhode Island Red Club."

Check Profit Years

How many years of profitable laying is a good hen good for? Many poultrymen and researchers would like to know, for a 300-egger isn't such a good investment unless she remains alive. Cornell university has a hen now in her eighth year with seven good years behind her and still going strong. In seven years this industrious biddy has cackled over 1,401 eggs, an average of 200 a year. Thirty-three other laying birds of the same strain, are four years old or over.

GOLDEN EGGS

In a recent discussion of "Prosperity and Industry," James F Bell, Chairman of the Board of General Mills, Minneapolis, Minn., made some interesting remarks on the subject of profits.

"We hear a great deal of small talk about industry being run on the profit system," he said. "It is important to point out and to restate that business is conducted, not on the profit system, but on the profit and loss system and that the only way to have profits exceed losses is through increased efficiency. Let us bear in mind that the Government cannot produce wealth, nor can goverment, except to a small extent and most incompetently, distribute wealth. It therefore depends upon industry for its very existence because people can only live and prosper through the fruits of industry."

Bell steered clear of statistical arguments. Had he chosen to do so, he could have pointed out that in 1933, industry paid $423,068,000 in taxes to the federal government. That was a bad business year; most industries were losing money. But they paid nearly half a billion dollars in taxes just the same.

At the same time, that is, in 1933, individuals paid $374,120,000 in income taxes. Where did they get that money? Most of them got it from industry. In other words, industry itself not only paid a $423,068,000 tax bill but it also provided most of the income that produced $374,120,000 more in taxes.

Yet there are some short-sighted persons who figure that because industry does make a profit occasionally most of that profit should be taken away by the government in taxes. The way that argument adds up is this:

In one of the worst depression years, the goose laid nearly a billion golden eggs. Let's cut her open and get the rset of them now.

—o o—

The average citizen works 70 days a year to pay direct and indirect taxes, according to the St. Louis Star-Times, which adds: "He does this because he loves his Uncle Sam, because he is patriotic and because, try as he may, he can't figure up any way of getting out of it."

ROAD LIGHTING URGED

Electric lighting of country highways to increase their efficiency, reduce accidents and aid night flying is urged in a proposal by Louis J. Brooks, prominent Missouri farmer and first president of the state's hard road association.

The idea is said to have been favorably received by Federal, state and county highway officials, many of whom feel that the lighting of the roads is a logical forward step in the development of the nation's highway system.

Electrical engineers recommend powerful roadway lamps placed at intervals of 100 yards, which it is estimated would add about five per cent to the average cost of paved highways.

Special legislation would be required to permit lighting to be included in expenditures in roads, but already three states, New York, New Jersey, and Georgia, have laws authorizing such expenditures in the more populous counties. Detroit claims to have already 345 miles of lighted rural highways in its vicinity.

It seems that road lighting would fit in admirably with the general program of rural electrification in many states.

WHAT OF HEALTH FADS?

The subject of how to live long is always of interest, which perhaps accounts for the eagerness of the average mortal to seize on various methods which are recommended for promoting health and longevity, such as doing daily exercise to radio music and the like.

However, there are many who are skeptical regarding the real benefits of strenuous physical activity. One of these wrote a letter to the Cleveland Press, pointing out that Walter Camp, famed athlete and originator of the "daily dozen," died at 65, while he, the writer, had never taken any kind of exercise to speak of and was still in excellent health, though a great grandfather. He added that "the longest-lived people are the physically lazy, but mentally alert."

Commenting on the letter William Feather, a well-known editor, declares that several years ago he adopted a vigorous health program including vegetarianism, cold baths and the daily dozen, with this result:

"Acute indigestion led to the abandonment of vegetarianism on doctor's orders. Another doctor recommended discontinuance of cold baths. The daily dozen are still pursued, but faith in them has been shaken by the untimely death of their inventor."

Still, we may find many who swear by the health fads and feel that their lives have been saved thereby. As the proverb has it, "What is food for some is black poison to others."

Housewives Everywhere Now Can Enjoy Modern Gas-Cooking Service At Low Cost, Thanks to W. C. Coleman's Invention

Utilizing the principle of carburization used in present day automobile engines, W. C. Coleman, noted inventor and pioneer manufacturer of gas-pressure appliances, has invented an amazing new cooking stove that makes its own gas from ordinary lead-free gasoline.

W. C. COLEMAN

An ingenious device converts liquid fuel into vapor gas—then mixes it with fresh, live air so that the fuel, when it reaches the burner, is actually about 96% air and 4% vapor gas. This remarkable invention has effected fuel-saving economies which, combined with the heating efficiency of the Coleman patented Band-A-Blu Burners, makes the new Coleman Safety Range cheaper to use than wood, coal or kerosene.

Housewives everywhere express appreciation for the convenience, safety, economy and beauty of a stove which provides cooking equalling that of the finest city gas range.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful Coleman Ranges will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman. Dept. WU-237, Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

Italy Annexes Ethiopia, Defying the League

TRIUMPHANTLY and defiantly, Benito Mussolini formally proclaimed the annexation of conquered Ethiopia by Italy and the restoration of the Roman empire. As did Disraeli in the case of India, he made his monarch emperor of the African realm, and Marshal Badoglio was appointed viceroy.

Benito Mussolini

The duce did not know and apparently care what the League of Nations would think about this swallowing of one of its members by another member. The league council met in Geneva to deal with the question and seemingly intended merely to condemn Italy's action and then adjourn until June, when France's new leftist government will be in power. First, however, it decided, over the protest of Baron Pompeo Aloisi of Italy, to keep the question on the agenda; and because Wolde Mariam, representative of Ethiopia, was permitted to take his seat at a closed sitting of the council, Aloisi stalked out of the room. This was his statement to the delegates:

"I have the honor to declare that the Italian delegation cannot admit of the presence at the council table of the so-called Ethiopian delegate.

"There exists, indeed, no semblance of organization of the Ethiopian state.

"The only sovereignty existing in Ethiopia is that of Italy.

"All discussion on the subject of the Italo-Ethiopian difference would, consequently, have no object.

"Therefore I find myself obliged to refrain from participating in the discussion."

Mariam told the council the greater part of the country west of Addis Ababa remains free and independent and continues to defend itself, and the council still considers that Emperor Haile Selassie's government is in existence. For the present, apparently, there will be no move to lift the sanctions against Italy.

Prime Minister Baldwin of Great Britain refused to tell questioners in parliament what attitude his government would take now in the matter of recognizing Italian sovereignty over Ethiopia.

Four Navy Radio Men Rewarded for Bravery

THE four navy radio men who manned the transmitting set in the American legation at Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, keeping this government informed of the rioting in the Ethiopian capital and helping fight off bandits, are to be advanced in rating for outstanding conduct.

This decision was made by the bureau of navigation at the urgent recommendation of Minister Cornelius Van H. Engert, who in a message to the Navy department praised them "for commendable zeal and efficiency in the performance of duty under unusual and difficult circumstances."

W. E. Tanner, acting chief radioman, will be made chief radio man effective August 15. W. L. Pitts, radio man first class, will be given a course of instruction after his return to the United States to qualify him for the same rating. C. F. Cavanah and J. W. Anslow, radio men second class, will be promoted to radio men first class.

Leon Blum's Program for France Given

LEON BLUM, leader of the National Socialists and organizer of the "popular front" of leftists that won the recent French elections, will be practically the dictator of France when Premier Sarrout and his cabinet resign on June 2 and the new government takes office. Blum laid down this four-point foreign policy program which he said the nation would follow at least until the next election in 1940:

1. Adherence to the League of Nations.
2. Consolidation of European peace.
3. Promotion of mutual assistance pacts.
4. Progressive disarmament.

Speaking to the national Socialist council Blum said: "We must consolidate the country against Fascist attacks We must put the republican spirit in all high administrations, and we will deprive the Fascists of all secret means of propaganda."

Ickes-Hopkins Feud Moves to Senate

SECRETARY ICKES' supporters were easily defeated by the Harry Hopkins forces in the house fight as to whether the Public Works administration should share in the handling of next year's relief funds. But it was understood the feud would be revived in the senate under the leadership of Senator Hayden of Arizona, Democrat and a member of the appropriations committee.

The house majority voted according to the wishes of the administration on the relief bill, which is a $2,364,229,712 measure carrying $1,425,000,000 to finance the Works Progress administration after July 1.

In addition to the relief appropriation, the bill carries $458,631,860 for the social security program, $39,900,000 for the Tennessee Valley Authority, $400,000 for continuing the communications commission's telephone inquiry, and various new and deficiency amounts for other agencies.

The most important amendment permitted to be added to the bill by the house leaders was one submitted by Representative William P. Connery providing that the prevailing wage in communities be paid to WPA workers. The Hopkins organization will pay out approximately the same sum per man per year, it was explained, but will work the men only one, two, or three days a week where they formerly worked four, five and six days each week.

In a surprise move the house also voted to bar aliens "illegally within the limits of the United States" from receiving jobs under the WPA program. Most of the opposition came from two radicals, Vito Marcantonio of New York city and Gerald J. Bolleau of Wisconsin.

Ickes signified his acceptance of defeat in the battle for funds by ordering an immediate cut of 25 per cent in PWA personnel in Washington and throughout the country. This affects 2,000 persons.

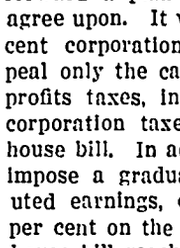
Senators Seek Compromise Corporate Tax Bill

OPPOSITION in the senate finance committee to the corporate profits tax in the administration's $803,000,000 revenue bill was so strong that both Democrats and Republicans sought for some compromise. Treasury officials were heard in favor of the measure as passed by the house, but former treasury officials and various business and industrial leaders speaking in opposition were seemingly more persuasive. Senator Tom Connally of Texas put forward a plan he thought all might agree upon. It would retain the 15 per cent corporation income tax and repeal only the capital stock and excess profits taxes, instead of repealing all corporation taxes as proposed in the house bill. In addition it would superimpose a graduated tax on undistributed earnings, exempting the first 20 per cent on the amount retained. The house bill reaches a maximum of 42½ per cent of the total income if none is distributed.

Senator Byrd of Virginia, another of the Democrats opposed to the house bill, showed, in a letter to Secretary Morgenthau, that 11 of the largest corporations in the country would pay no taxes under the Roosevelt bill.

Landon Ticket Loses in California Primary

CALIFORNIA'S Presidential Republican preference primary, eagerly awaited by the whole country, resulted in the defeat of the Landon slate of delegates that was put forward by William R. Hearst and Governor Merriam, with Landon's tacit consent. The winning delegates, backed by Herbert Hoover and nominally pledged to Earl Warren though uninstructed, carried the state by a majority of about 90,000. Mr. Warren announced at once that he released them from their pledge, to vote as they see fit in the convention.



Alf Landon

This looked like a blow to Governor Landon, and to a certain extent it was; but his managers claim at least 18 of the delegates will go over to the Kansan on an early ballot. Moreover, many friends of Landon deprecated the fact that Hearst was supporting him, believing it would do him more harm than good; and they were glad to see him freed in part from what they consider an incubus.

Democrats voted almost solidly for Mr. Roosevelt. Upton ("Epic") Sinclair's ticket received something over 100,000 votes, and that of John S. McGroarty, Townsend plan supporter, about half as many.

In South Dakota a slate of uninstructed delegates favoring Landon won over a ticket pledged to Senator Borah, though the margin was slender.

American Red Cross Meets in Chicago

SOME two thousand delegates were present when the annual convention of the American Red Cross was opened in Chicago by Admiral Cary T. Grayson, the national chairman. Speakers at early sessions included Mayor Ed Kelly, and Ralph Christian, schoolboy of Birmingham, Ala., representing the Junior Red Cross. Mrs. Elizabeth H. Vaughan, a nurse of St. Louis, was awarded the Florence Nightingale medal for her long record of service.

Dr. Thomas Parran, Jr., the new surgeon general of the United States public health service, was present and made a speech, and talks were delivered by Robert E. Bondy, director of national disaster relief, and others who directed activities in the flood and storm areas.

Huge German Dirigible Arrives and Departs

HINDENBURG, the immense dirigible, carrying 107 persons, mail and freight, made the flight from Friedrichshafen to Lakehurst, N. J., in 61 hours and 57 minutes and was welcomed by thousands of Americans, including R. Walton Moore of the State department who brought the greetings and congratulations of President Roosevelt. Three days later the airship started back to her new base at Frankfurt-on-Main. The dirigible was in the command of Capt. Ernst Lehmann, but he received far less attention here than did Dr. Hugo Eckener, the veteran skipper of Zeppelins. Eckener, in bad with the Nazis at home, was permitted to be aboard the ship as an "adviser." He and Captain Lehmann went to Washington together, while the ship was being groomed for the return flight, to call on President Roosevelt and other officials and return their greetings.

Hull Negotiates Trade Agreement With France

SECRETARY OF STATE HULL has successfully negotiated another reciprocal trade agreement. It is with France and was signed at the State department by Mr. Hull and Andre de Laboulaye, the French ambassador. It will become effective on June 15, and the details of the pact were not immediately made public. It is believed the terms include duty concessions by the United States on French wines, cigarette papers, and luxuries such as laces and cosmetics, and by France on American exports of agricultural and industrial products. The agreement is also understood to contain increases in French quotas on American exports of fruits, and possibly other products.

Leader of Wafd in Egypt Forms New Cabinet

MUSTAPHA NAHAS PASHA, leader of the Wafd or Nationalist party in Egypt, has become premier and formed a new government in which he holds also the post of minister of the interior. Wasyf Ghali Pasha is his foreign minister and Gen. Ali Fahmy Pasha is minister of war and marine.

Premier Ali Pasha Maher and his cabinet resigned following the appointment of a regency to serve until young King Farouk reaches the age of eighteen.

Senator Park Trammell of Florida Is Dead

PARK TRAMMELL, veteran United States senator from Florida and a staunch supporter of all New Deal measures, died in Washington of a cerebral hemorrhage which followed an attack of influenza. Though ill, he tried to remain on the senate floor long enough to vote for a proposal to include $12,000,000 in the War department appropriation bill for continuation of the Florida ship canal. This effort probably cost him his life.

Thirty-five years ago Mr. Trammell, just out of college, was elected mayor of Lakeland, Fla. Later he served in both branches of the Florida legislature, as state attorney general, and as governor for four years. Never defeated in an election, he was named United States senator in November, 1916, two months before the expiration of his term as governor. At the time of his death he was chairman of the senate naval affairs committee.

Manuel Azana Is Made President of Spain

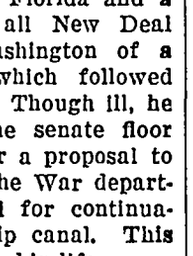
MANUEL AZANA was advanced from the premiership to the presidency of Spain by almost unanimous vote of the 874 electors gathered in the Crystal palace at Madrid. He succeeds Niceto Alcala Zamora who was removed from office on a charge of malfeasance after the Leftist victory in the recent elections.



Manuel Azana

Azana, fifty-six years old, is a lawyer, orator and playwright and is regarded as the most astute politician in Spain. To the notification committee he said: "Spain may rest assured that I will be loyal to the principles of democracy and that the welfare of the nation will be my constant concern."

Shifts in Population Shown by Census

ELEVEN states have fewer residents now than in 1930, although many other states have made decided gains in the last five years. These shifts are shown in statistics presented by the census bureau.

From 1930 to 1935 the population of the country gained from 122,775,046 to an estimated 127,521,000 or nearly 5,000,000.

New York, with 12,889,000 persons as compared to 12,588,066 in 1930 remained the nation's largest state. Pennsylvania was second, with 10,066,008 as compared to 9,631,350. Illinois was third with 7,817,000 as compared to 7,630,000.

The eleven states which lost through population shifts, and the estimated percentage of loss are: Michigan, 3.7; Wisconsin, 1.1; South Dakota, 2.6; Rhode Island, .9; Nebraska, 1.9; Kansas, 1.8; Mississippi, 2.4; Montana, 1.2; New Mexico, 5.0; Arizona, 11.4, and California, 0.7.

Hello Everybody!

"The Crawling Horde"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

Now here comes Pat Mangan, of Brooklyn, N. Y., to get me all tangled up. Pat doesn't talk my language at all—in spite of the fact, judging from his name, his folks came from the same part of Hibernia that mine did.

But Pat talks about "billycans," and about "carrying his swag" and a lot of other things that have me running round in circles. I know that talk is Australian lingo, but I don't know what it means.

It was in the spring of 1902 that Pat arrived in Sydney, way down on the southeast coast of the island continent. He had heard a lot about the Australian Bush—the great open spaces just back from the narrow fringe of civilization that fringes the shore—and he wanted to see it. The men he met around Sydney all talked of "carrying your swag" and Pat and his partner, Bob, decided to have a try at it.

Australian "Swagmen" Travel by the Stars.

I don't know what a "swag," as near as I can figure it out, is a sort of pack you carry on your back. Anyway, Pat says he and Bob bought a tent, a "tommyhawk," blankets and a "billycan," rolled them up into a pack and boarded a train that took them on a 14-hour trip through the bush to the town of Daptol—a little way-station consisting of a saloon, a blacksmith shop and 15 houses.

They got off the train at Daptol and went into the saloon. "Most of the customers in the bar," says Pat, "were swagmen like ourselves. We asked one of them if there was any work to be had around town. 'Why,' he said. 'There's plenty at the smelting works.' We asked him where the smelting works was, and his answer astounded us.

"'Oh, it's about forty-five miles farther south,' he said. 'The easiest way to get there is to wait until night and then follow the tail star of the Southern Cross.' That's the way distances go in Australia. Forty-five miles is 'around town,' and you navigate the Bush by the stars like you would the ocean."

Snaky Visitors Invade the Adventurers' Camp.

That night Bob and Pat shouldered their "swags" again and hit the trail. They plodded along for about twenty miles, until they came to a fresh-water creek. They were both dead tired by that time, and decided to pitch camp and stay there for the rest of the night.

"We made a fire," says Pat, "and boiled some coffee in our 'billycans.' We had a bite to eat, and then retired into the tent for a smoke. Bob suggested that we write some letters, and we got out pencil and paper and lay down on our stomachs. We had been writing for about twenty minutes when Bob heard a noise at the side of the tent. He looked up and uttered a frightful cry."

Bob's cry startled Pat half out of his wits. It was a sudden terrified scream. "My God, Paddy, don't move!" Pat turned his head. "What's the matter, Bob?" For answer Bob pointed mutely to the top of the tent.

It was still dark, but a bright moon was shining in the sky. In its yellow light both men could see shadows of objects on the top of the tent—long, wriggling shadows—snakes—dozens of them—crawling all over the upper side of their flimsy canvas shelter!

The Reptiles Stayed Outside of the Tent.

Pat raised himself up on one elbow and took a cautious look around. There were no snakes inside the tent—not yet. But outside, there were thousands of them, swarming toward them from every side. While they watched, the dozens of snakes on top of the tent became hundreds, as more and more of them came to keep up its sloping sides.

"We didn't know whether they were poisonous or not," says Pat, "but a bite from one of them might easily mean death. There wasn't any possible means of escape. Bob was hysterical and I was cold with fear. The snakes were closing in on us. In another moment they would be pouring into the tent. I began to wonder why they had not come in before. Something seemed to be holding them back."

The more Pat thought of it, the more he was convinced that something was keeping those reptiles out of the tent. Then it occurred to him that maybe it was light they were afraid of. That gave him an idea. He told it to Bob. Immediately they began piling the blankets—the paper they had been writing on—everything inflammable—along the sides and around the front and back of their shelter.

Ordeal by Fire Drives Away the Slimy Invaders.

As soon as that was done, Pat picked up the candle and prayed that his scheme would work. He held the candle to the top of the tent. The canvas began to burn. In ten seconds the tent—their blankets—everything they owned—was burning in a merry blaze.

"We huddled in the center of the tent," says Pat, "while fire burned all around us and over our heads. In no time at all the tent fell in ashes, but the blankets continued to burn, forming a ring of flame that I had hoped would keep the snakes at bay. That ring of flame wasn't even necessary, for at the first sign of fire the snakes fled."

Bob's hunch had been right. The light was what the snakes were afraid of. Bob never got to the smelting works they were headed for. They turned around and went back to the bright lights of Sydney. They had had enough of the bush and of "carrying their swag."

Where the Tone of Violin Is Produced

Roughly what happens to the bow as a violinist is playing on a similar instrument:

The bow vibrates, and sets the string in motion. Vibrations are carried through the instrument to the two feet of the post. Emerging from these, they flash out to the sides. The grain of the wood goes from the center to the sides, and the vibrations must follow the grain. The motion to the sides is absolutely vertical, so that the sound is carried on to the front of the instrument, technically called the "belly."

The motion on the belly runs down and across from the top to the bottom, and is thrown by those curious-looking holes—rather like the letter "f"—from where that each vibration starts. The slant of the "f's" at the top, in which it flicks away as from the end of a whiplash. And that, the authority, is why those holes are there and not just as air vents. Some people will tell you—nor just to look pretty. The whole idea is to insure "one-way traffic" of vibrations, which is why the violinist can control the vibrations so perfectly with his bow.

The back of the instrument with its divergent grain is usually made of some kind of sycamore or maple, while the belly is nearly always of pine.—Tit-Bits Magazine.

Windows

Windows originally were divided into small panes, because only small panes could be made economically. When the art of glass making made large panes possible, the tendency was to clear windows of all cross pieces and have large, unobstructed surfaces. The effect of these gaping spaces on the architectural appearance of the house was not considered. As the wonder of large panes wore away, we became conscious of the lack of these bars of wood or metal in our windows. We began to realize the beauty of a leaded casement in an English cottage and a 24-light window in a New England farmhouse.

A Holcombe?

THERE is a very ancient English family which probably took its name from the old town in Lancashire called "Holcombe." The family seat, however, was in County Devon, and old wills of Devonshire mention many of this name. We note the names of Thomas, Elizabeth and three Johns.

The most remote ancestor of the Holcombes, through marriage, was William the Conqueror. John Holcombe is the first mentioned in the Visitations of England. He was a Crusader and the story is that he severed the heads of three Mohammedans with one stroke of his sword. This explains the four heads on the coat of arms shown. The effigy of this brave knight rests in the old abbey at Dorchester, near Oxford, England.

Thomas Holcombe, one of the first Americans of the name, was born in Devonshire in 1601. In 1630 he came to America on the famous ship Mary and John, and settled in Dorchester, Mass., which is now a part of Boston. Dorchester was so named in honor of the well-loved English town.

Most of the Holcombes of the New England states trace their ancestry to Thomas, as do some families in other states.

Then there was John Holcombe, a Quaker, who emigrated from England in 1700, and settled in Philadelphia, and also his brother Jacob, who located in Lambertville, N. J. Many men of this name served in the French and Indian war and in the American Revolution.

The southern branch of the Holcombes in this country began with Andrew, of Devonshire, England, who came first to the Barbadoes and then to Virginia. His son, John, married Miss Grimes and lived in King William county, Virginia.

The Holcombes in America have been people of high social standing and prominence in every generation. The motto "truth and courage" is characteristic of the family traits and traditions.

A Pierrepont?

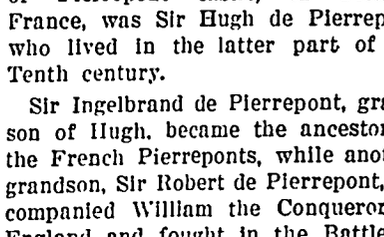
THE Pierrepont family is of Norman-French origin. The first lord of Pierrepont castle, in Picardy, France, was Sir Hugh de Pierrepont, who lived in the latter part of the Tenth century.

Sir Ingelbrand de Pierrepont, grandson of Hugh, became the ancestor of the French Pierreponts, while another grandson, Sir Robert de Pierrepont, accompanied William the Conqueror to England and fought in the Battle of Hastings. His name is found on the Doomsday Book of England, that great document drawn up by the Conqueror to show the titleholders of the conquered lands. Robert de Pierrepont was granted the lordships of Henestede and Wrentham, in Suffolk.

Henry Pierrepont, grandson of Sir Robert, was knighted by Edward I in 1280.

Several generations later descendants of the same family are found to have lived in the counties of Nottingham and Derby. George Pierrepont was of this section and was created a Knight of the Carpet at the coronation of Edward VI.



Sir George Pierrepont, a descendant of the knight, was one of the first of the family to come to America. He had married Thankful Stow, of Kent, England, and, arriving in America, settled in Ipswich, Mass. They purchased land where Dorchester and Rochester now stand. George Pierrepont named Dorchester for his cousin, the Marquis of Dorchester.

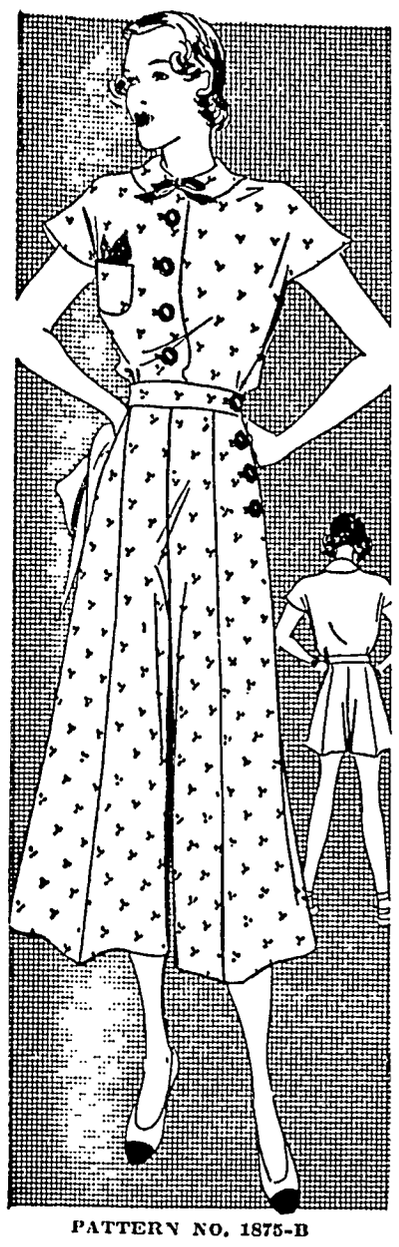
Divided Skirt and Shorts Combination That Equips the Young Lady for Sports



PATTERN NO. 1875-B

You know yourself that half the enjoyment of any sport is spoiled if you aren't correctly dressed, and really there's no excuse for not being equipped for any active sport when a model such as illustrated is so easy and inexpensive to make.

The divided skirt is suitable for golf, tennis, bicycling, riding and hiking. It assures plenty of room and comfort, buttons on the side and supports the most youthful blouse. Note the sports pocket, Peter Pan collar, raglan sleeve and dainty feminine bow.

Instead of the divided skirt, you may have shorts if you prefer, for the pattern is perforated at just the proper length. Notice the small sketch.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1875-B is available in sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Corresponding bust measurements 30, 32, 34, 36 and 38. Size 16 (34) requires 4¼ yards of 35 inch fabric. For shorts only, 3½ yards is required. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

The wood trimming around windows, doors, eaves, etc, at the M E Church was repainted last week Window sashes were trimmed in a light green and the other trim is in white

Quandt Cafe Being Repainted

Conrad Quandt, proprietor of the Quandt Cafe, has caught the spirit of making Klemme a nice looking town by having his cafe building treated to a new coat of paint Mr Quandt says, "I like to have my place look spic and span" Not casting any reflections, but the writer notes that other buildings along Main Street need paint worse than Mr Quandt's building

Helps Property Further Improved

Everytime the writer mentions some further work being done at the Henry Helps home, Henry immediately thinks up more work for someone to do, so it seems hard to catch up with Henry This week painters are putting the trimming touches on the house and carpenters are finishing the job of building a garage to house Henry's bus

New Office Quarters

Although we have mentioned it before, the new office quarters for Dr Missman in the Wellemeyer building are going to be much nicer than the writer expected Mr Wellemeyer has done a nice job of planning the remodeling work, which is shaping into a nice suite of office rooms that will consist of a reception room, X-Ray and general medical room and a private consultation and examination room Dr Missman should be quite comfortable in the new quarters

Will Put Up Entire New Set Of Farm Buildings

"KLEMME" GOES WITH SUPT. HUNTER TO CHARTER OAK

"Klemme" is the name of the pig presented Supt D L Hunter by the members of the Senior Class Several of the Senior boys invaded the Albert Barz farm and selected the finest pig in the herd, and spent considerable time in giving the porker a bath rub down and general polishing up It is said that the Senior girls curled the tail and tied a ribbon around "Klemme's" neck and another around the curly tail

The porker was duly placed in a nice new crate and given to Mr Hunter Friday morning

If we are a good judge of pigs "Klemme" will have quite a following in time to come!

Guffey Coal Act Is Declared Invalid

SIX members of the Supreme court of the United States ruled that the Guffey act to control the bituminous coal industry is invalid, and another of the New Deal experiments goes into the discard. This is the act which President Roosevelt urged congress to pass notwithstanding doubts of its constitutionality "however reasonable."

Sen. Guffey

Five justices—Sutherland, Butler, Van Devanter, McReynolds, and Roberts—joined in the majority opinion which invalidated the whole act. Justices Cardozo, Brandeis and Stone joined in a dissenting opinion in which they upheld the act. Chief Justice Hughes held in a separate opinion that the act was constitutional with respect to the marketing provisions but unconstitutional with respect to the labor regulations.

The court in the majority opinion held that there is no authority in the Constitution for the control of the coal industry attempted in the Guffey act. The act was not valid either under the commerce clause or the welfare clause. Power was unlawfully delegated to set up a coal code similar to the codes of the invalidated NRA and the regulations establishing working hours of miners were a violation of the fifth amendment prohibiting the taking of property without due process of law. Mining, the court declared, is a local industry the state jurisdiction whereof the federal government has no authority to invade.

Congress provided that if one part of the act were held unconstitutional other parts should not be affected. But the majority declined to accept that arrangement, ruling that the price fixing provisions were inextricably interwoven with the labor regulations.

Senator Guffey, author of the act, declined to comment on the opinion, but it was said he was preparing a substitute measure.

John Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers, said that "it is a sad commentary upon our form of government when every decision of the Supreme court seems designed to fatten capital and starve and destroy labor."

Tugwell's Housing Hit by Court Decision

THE resettlement administration headed by Rexford Guy Tugwell was declared by the District of Columbia court of appeals to be "clearly unconstitutional delegation of power," in a case involving a model community project in Somerset county, New Jersey.

Going beyond the issue before them, the justices of the Appeals court called the entire relief appropriations act of 1935 into question. The act was invalid and hence RA was invalid, according to the court. Legally, however, none of the rest of the act will be affected by the decision because the other multitudinous activities of the New Deal under the appropriation were not before the court.

Solicitor Gen. Stanley Reed said an appeal would be taken to the Supreme court at once.

Uncle Sam Stands by Nine Power Pact

NEWS that Japan was greatly enlarging her force in North China led the State department in Washington to announce that the position of the United States is the same as that one year ago. Secretary Hull's statement is a restatement of the nine power treaty. Although the statement does not mention Japan by name, Mr. Hull said the country has a firing fault in the foreign policy [illegible] its traditional policy. The government also reserves the provisions of the treaties to which it is a party and considers itself bound in respect by all nations for the purposes of treaties solemnly entered into for the purpose of facilitating and regulating international and common advantage.

At the State department it was said that the reaffirmation of support of the nine power pact does not mean that the administration will abandon its policy of declining to take the initiative in any attempt to curb Japan for violations of the pact. This was attempted by Henry L. Stimson, secretary of state in the Hoover administration, with the gain of nothing but Japanese ill will.

Japanese military strength in North China south of the Great Wall is now said to be fully 150,000 men. There are about 80,000 more in Manchukuo and still others in Inner Mongolia.

War Debts Will Be Defaulted Again

NEITHER Great Britain nor France has any intention of paying the installments on the American war debt due June 15. And almost certainly all the other debtor nations except Finland will follow the example of the two big ones and again default. British Foreign Minister Eden talked about the debts with Leon Blum, who probably will be premier of France soon, but there was no indication that either one was planning to make a payment. Blum told the American club in Paris he hoped the war debt "misunderstanding" might be cleared up, but he was just trying to be pleasant to the people of both America and France without spending any money.

Of course the debtor nations would like to have the issue cleared up, for as long as they are in default they are subject to the restrictions of the Johnson act which makes it unlawful for any person in the United States to purchase or sell the bonds, securities or other obligations of any foreign government or to make any loans to such a government while that government is in default in payment of its obligations to the United States.

President of Bolivia Is Compelled to Resign

JOSE LUIS TEJADA SORZANO was forced to resign the presidency of Bolivia by a junta of army officers and Socialists who staged a bloodless coup d'etat in La Paz. Col. German Busch, acting chief of the general army staff, leader of the coup, will be at the head of the government until Col. David Toro, hero of the war with Paraguay, returns from the Chaco, when Toro will be installed as president.

The immediate objective of the new administration was complete settlement of a general strike which the officers asserted was imperiling the country's economic stability. The labor federation quickly suspended the strike movement, expressing solidarity with the army-Socialist coup.

Italy Releases Alleged Leader in King's Killing

DR. ANTON PAVELIC, alleged leader of Ustashi, the Croatian terrorist organization, and accused as one of the "master minds" in the assassination of King Alexander of Jugoslavia in Marseilles, has been set free by the Italian authorities. Released with him was his lieutenant, Eugene Kvaternik. The two were arrested at Turin in October, 1934, soon after the murder of Alexander, but the French authorities who were working on the case were never permitted to question them and an Italian tribunal refused the request of the French government for their extradition to France for trial.

Dr. Pavelic

General Is the New Premier of Poland

POLAND feels that another European war is more than likely to break out soon, and she intends to be ready to take part in the conflict. A new government has been installed with Gen. Felician Slawoj-Skladkowski as premier and minister of the interior. The general took the oath of office wearing his uniform, which was taken as symbolic of the government's program. Poland will be adequately armed. Opposition leaders are warned that they will be prosecuted, as they were by Pilsudski after 1930.

Borah Is Loser in the Ohio Primaries

SENATOR WILLIAM BORAH banked heavily on success in the Ohio Presidential preference primary, but the Republicans of that state turned him down decisively in favor of their "favorite son," Robert A. Taft, son of the late President Taft. Of the 52 delegates to the Cleveland convention Borah captured only five, the others including the delegates at large, being Taft men. The Borah delegation will be virtually unpledged, because it will vote for Taft only on the first ballot. Mr. Borah did not take this defeat calmly. He gave out a statement in Washington accusing the Republican organization leaders of manipulating the votes of colored citizens against him by promising the passage of federal anti-lynching legislation which he has opposed as unconstitutional.

Senator Borah

Ohio Democrats polled about 500,000 votes in the primary, nearly 100,000 more than the Republicans, and they expressed their preference for Mr. Roosevelt over Col. Henry Breckenridge to the tune of 16 to 1. They also renominated Gov. Martin L. Davey, who will be opposed by John W. Bricker, Republican, in November.

About twenty of Pennsylvania's delegation to the Republican convention were pledged to support the popular choice of the state, which turned out to be Mr. Borah, no other name being officially entered at the April 28 primary. The delegation, which is uninstructed, has now voted that those members must keep their pledge on the first ballot or until it becomes manifestly impossible for their choice to win. This action was taken on motion of former Senator David A. Reed.

Former Governor Small of Illinois Dies

LEN SMALL, twice governor of Illinois and prominent in the politics of the state for nearly forty years, died suddenly in a Kankakee hospital from an embolism resulting from an operation. He was seventy-three years old. Mr. Small's career was rather stormy. His enemies were many and bitter, and he fought them courageously; his friends were devoted to him, and he was always loyal to them. In addition to his eight years as governor, he served two terms as state treasurer. Moreover, he was defeated for governor four times. He sought the Republican nomination again in the recent primary but was defeated.

Tugwell's Report on Resettlement Work

RESPONDING to a senate resolution, Rexford Tugwell made a report on the activities of the resettlement administration of which he is the head. He showed that it has 15,804 employees on the administration pay roll and has been allotted $275,549,944 to spend. Of this amount, the report stated, $85,047,095 has been spent and a total of $173,051,823 obligated, leaving $102,458,112 unincumbered.

R. G. Tugwell

Up to April 15, according to the report, the resettlement administration had taken options on 9,670,000 acres of land, of which options on 8,469,000 acres, costing $85,344,000, had become legal commitments. As of May 1, the report said, 39,721 persons, including 3,581 on the CCC pay roll, were employed in connection with the land acquisition program.

Of 33 subsistence homestead projects, construction has been completed on 18, is in progress on 11 and final plans have been drafted for 4. The report lists four suburban housing projects, financed from a $31,000,000 allocation for this purpose. They are in Berwyn, Md., Bound Brook, N. J., Milwaukee, and Cincinnati.

On rural rehabilitation, the report says the RA has cared for more than 800,000 families. For its rehabilitation advances to individual "clients," the administration will expend $106,000,000 through June 30.

Inflation Bill Defeated by the House

WE ARE not going to have any currency inflation, at least before next session of congress. The Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinancing bill, dragged out of committee by a petition signed by 218 house members, and then hotly debated for a day, was defeated by the decisive vote of 235 to 142. The bill called for the printing of three billion dollars for its financing.

The petition signers included 159 Democrats, and before the vote every one of them was told by Pat Boland of Pennsylvania, the party whip, that the President didn't want the measure passed at this time and that if the member voted for the bill it would be just too bad for him. Besides this potent argument the Democratic leaders induced President William Green of the American Federation of Labor to intervene and he called together the federation's executive council and had it write a letter saying it was opposed to the bill because of the inflation feature.

President Still Wants Ship Canal and Quoddy

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT was supposed to have abandoned for the present the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tidal power projects for which the house refused to appropriate further funds. But Senator Robinson of Arkansas was called to the White House for a conference and returned to the house to introduce a resolution authorizing the President to appoint engineering boards of review for the two schemes.

The boards would present their findings by June 20, and, if favorable, the President would have authorization to set aside $10,000,000 for the canal and $[illegible] for Passamaquoddy out of available relief money.

Starhemberg Ousted From Austrian Cabinet

CHANCELLOR KURT SCHUSCHNIGG of Austria has long been at odds with the vice chancellor, Prince Ernst von Starhemberg, and now he has got rid of that active young man and is practically the sole dictator of the country. This was accomplished by the resignation of the cabinet and its reconstruction immediately with Von Starhemberg left out.

Italy May Withdraw From League of Nations

BECAUSE the League of Nations council would not immediately recognize Italy's annexation of Ethiopia and the creation of the new Roman empire, Premier Mussolini recalled his representatives from Geneva, and before long Italy may quit the league entirely. At present it is merely "not participating" in its activities.

The Italians at Addis Ababa are executing many natives for espionage or murder, among them being the giant umbrella carrier of Haile Selassie. A number of newspaper men have been expelled because of "anti-Italian activities and espionage." Among them were George Steer, correspondent for the London Times and the New York Times; Isadore Nebenzahl, a representative of the Havas (French) News agency; Alkeos Anglopolo, a Hearst correspondent, and M. D. Robillard, director of an Ethiopian newspaper.

Youthful Authors Most Successful in "Best Seller" Race

Enduring Books Written by Authors Under 44

ATHENS, OHIO—Best sellers are most frequently written by young writers between forty and forty-four years old, Dr. Harvey C. Lehman, of Ohio University, here, told a meeting of the psychology section of the Ohio Academy of Sciences.

When Doctor Lehman speaks of best sellers, he does not mean those works that flare into popularity for a period only to fade out like a rocket or a hit-of-the-week song. He means those books that have sold in enormous quantities over a long period of time. "In His Steps," for example, published in 1896 by a Kansas minister, Charles M. Sheldon, is said to have sold more than 20,000,000 copies. And it is estimated that 50,000,000 copies of "Uncle Tom's Cabin" have been sold.

"Such best sellers are books that make a very strong appeal to humanity in general," Doctor Lehman said. "In many instances they are books which appeal strongly to children and to semi-literates."

Women's Peak Earlier.

Books judged by critics to be among the world's best are also most likely to be written by authors between forty and forty-four, Doctor Lehman found.

Women writers are likely to publish their greatest works at a somewhat earlier age. Their peak is reached between thirty-five and thirty-nine.

This does not mean that beyond that age authors lose their ability to do creative writing. Good books are often written by writers of advanced age. Goethe was over eighty when he published the second part of the great "Faust." But such occurrences are the exception rather than the rule.

No Age Limit.

"Best books have, of course, been published by authors of almost every chronological age level beyond early youth," Doctor Lehman said. "Literary masterpieces of the first rank have been published most frequently, however, by men who were not beyond their forties. The age curves suggest that it would be highly absurd to attempt to establish a dead line."

World's Oldest City Had Huge War Tower Described in Bible

PHILADELPHIA. — Imagine the same warfare tactics used for three thousand years!

It is hard to believe in this age of inventive speed.

That time amazingly stood still in this way in ancient Bible lands is revealed by latest excavations at that famous site, "the oldest city in the world," Tepe Gawra in Mesopotamia.

Searchers Find Ruins.

A joint expedition of the University museum, University of Pennsylvania, and the American School of Oriental Research at Baghdad, has found ruins of a big round temple-tower at Tepe Gawra. The sweep of an almost perfect circle of brick foundations 60 feet in diameter has been unearthed. Outlines of 17 rooms can be traced. This big round house was built about 4000 B. C.

The field director of the expedition Charles Bache, identified this as a fortress because of thick walls, single entrance, and stone weapons still lying in some of the rooms. It has temple features, too, suggested by the plan of the central rooms with an inner sanctum.

Turn to Bible.

The discovery turns archeologists to Bible history, where King Abimelech's wild and warlike reign ended in a fight at just such a temple-tower. That happened in Palestine, a little over a thousand years before Christ.

New Job for Pituitary Gland Found by Science

BOSTON.—Discovery of a new activity of the pituitary gland and possibly of a new pituitary hormone was reported by Dr. David Perla of New York city at the meeting of the American Association of Pathologists here.

The new hormone from the powerful but tiny gland in the head stimulates the spleen, red blood cell forming organ of the body. The spleen is endowed with enormous recuperative powers, so that when a part of it must be removed because of disease, or is damaged, the organ regenerates itself forming new spleen tissue to replace that lost.

Body Tells Tales About Its Owner's Emotional Upsets

"Organ Jargon" Is Clue in Discovering Ailments

THE human body sometimes turns tattler and tells tales that its owner would never reveal by word of mouth. Such tale-telling, in which the internal organs are spokesmen, is described by a psychiatrist, Dr. Douglas Gordon Campbell of the University of Chicago in a report in a recent issue of the Canadian Medical Association Journal.

"Organ jargon," Doctor Campbell calls this tale-telling, quoting from the Viennese psychiatrist, Dr. Alfred Adler. This does not mean the kind of "organ recitals" sometimes indulged in at sewing circles when the conversation turns to operations, gallbladders and appendixes.

"Organ jargon" is what goes on in certain perplexing ailments for which the physician can find no material cause and no successful medicines. These ailments, it is estimated, make up two-thirds or more of all the cases coming to practitioners and general clinics.

Organs Are Affected.

The patients complain of a too rapid pulse, or of digestive disorders or impairment of sexual function. Yet careful examinations show that there is nothing wrong with the organs complained of except that they are not functioning normally.

As Doctor Campbell sees it, they are telling tales of social or emotional disturbances that the patient fails to put into words. The organ jargon is a "kind of language by which a patient expresses his attitude to some problem of social adjustment confronting him."

"Moods" Cause Trouble.

The social adjustment may be caused by the loss of money or the birth of a child who takes from the patient his or her accustomed place in the spotlight of family attention.

Whatever the adjustment, it causes emotion in the patient. Some experience emotion as a "mood"—a so-called psychic experience, Doctor Campbell explains. Others experience an emotional reaction which is a physiological experience.

Valuable Finds in Astronomy Made by Amateur Students

WASHINGTON.—The fascination of amateur astronomy lies, in no small part, in the possibility that one may make original contributions to the oldest of sciences. In August, 1933, a British vaudeville performer, Will Hay, discovered a remarkable white spot on the planet Saturn.

And a Japanese melon patch worker in California, Masanl Hagata, received a medal from the Astronomical Society of the Pacific in 1931 for his discovery of a new comet. Both men were amateur astronomers observing with their own small instruments.

Mr. Hay, fellow of the Royal Astronomical society, who takes the role of a mirth-provoking schoolmaster as his routine stage skit, has just written a book, "Through My Telescope," which tells in simple language some of the facts of astronomy which most people want to know.

New Stars Found.

Sir Richard Gregory, editor of the most famous of all British science journals, Nature, writes the foreword to Mr. Hay's new book.

Says Sir Richard in part:

"Some of the most interesting discoveries in astronomy have, indeed, been made by non-professional observers, who may only be called amateurs if the term is rightly understood to mean people who take up a subject voluntarily, but not that their work is superficial or defective in the sense of being amateurish.

"Professional astronomers are so closely concentrated upon routine work that new celestial objects or phenomena are often first detected by voluntary observers."

One-Man Movie Theater Invented by New Yorker

WASHINGTON.—A one-man motion picture theater, which could be completely operated by a single attendant, including ticket selling, the making of change, taking the admission fee, and working the projecting machine, is described in a patent (No. 2,032,410) granted here to A. N. Goldsmith of New York city.

By a novel arrangement, the conventional ticket booth would also become the projecting room in which one person could run the whole "show." Use of fireproof film would be used to eliminate the fire hazard. The film would be of small size so that a complete two-hour show would be contained on a single reel. This eliminates the need for two or more projecting machines usually required where larger film is used, says the inventor.

The two-in-one booth is for use only in the "little theater" or small theater of restricted seating capacity, which charges but a small admission fee. It apparently is not intended to compete with or replace the regular motion picture theaters.

Poultry

FEED DETERMINES EGG YOLK

Poultryman Can Control Coloring of Yolk

Supplied by the United States Department of Agriculture—WNU Service.

Do you prefer an egg with a yellow yolk or one that has an orange-red color? Deeply colored yolks are used by housewives when they wish to impart a golden color to their cakes. Such yolks are also used in making richly tinted ice cream.

A hen can transfer different shades of yellow to the yolk—depending on the kind of feed she receives. By substituting white corn for yellow corn and limiting the amount of green feed, which tends to produce light yellow yolks, the poultryman keeps his layers confined and uses little or no green feed, he must be careful to supply some other source of vitamin A. If he uses white corn which contains almost none of this vitamin, he can supply this by mixing a suitable quantity of cod-liver oil with the evening mash or of scratch grain.

Yolks with richer shades of yellow may be obtained by increasing the quantity of yellow corn and green feed. Too much green feed tends to make the yolk a brown or green color.

Small quantities of pimento or red pepper, included in regular mash, will give yolks a deep orange-red color.

Tests Demonstrate That Pullorum Is Transmitted

Proof that pullorum disease is transmissible from infected hens to normal hens or pullets has been obtained in an experiment conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture. Pullets free from pullorum disease were allowed to mingle for seven months with hens infected with the disease, as shown by reaction to the agglutination test.

The two groups were then separated and mated to nonreactor cocks. During the following two months eggs from hens were trapnested and the eggs saved for hatching. Bacteriological examinations of the dead embryos and baby chicks which died within two weeks after hatching, and the hens showed that half of the exposed chicks acquired the disease from the hens already infected. Similar tests confirmed the presence of the disease in the reactor group.

"This evidence," says Dr. [illegible] Bunyea, of the bureau of animal industry, who had charge of the experiment, "shows that under ordinary flock conditions pullorum disease is transmissible from reactor to nonreactor hens without regard to the influence of the male birds. This possibility has received comparatively little emphasis by poultrymen and experimenters, and evidence on the subject has been limited.

The result of the experiment emphasizes the importance of removing from the flock all hens that react to the test. It also shows the danger in introducing new birds into the flock without knowing they are free of the disease.

Preventing Coccidiosis

Coccidiosis should be prevented by the observance of the needed sanitary precautions in early life, the organisms of this disease being kept away from the chicks by keeping the latter off "old ground" or other sources of contamination. The organisms responsible for coccidiosis are so universally present where poultry has long been kept that it is sometimes necessary to raise chicks upon wire mesh floors if they are to be saved from infection. Prevention, not cure, must be the aim of the poultryman who would save his flocks from this scourge of the poultry yard, warns an expert in the New-Yorker.

Size of Eggs Important

Size of eggs is one of the important factors in determining the gross income of a pullet flock. And while it is recognized that pullets produce smaller eggs for a period of time after they start production, this period will usually extend over many months if the birds have been properly bred and reared. Late hatched and poorly grown birds will produce small eggs, even though they may be well-bred stock.

With the Poultrymen

A variation in feeding hens is excellent, for variety keeps a hen's appetite from lagging.

Cannibalistic tendencies in chickens are curbed by a beak guard, which swings clear when the head is lowered to feed.

Green or red bulbs are used to some extent for lighting brooder rooms and for brooders, and tend to prevent cannibalism.

Friers and broilers, encouraged to light to eat and drink more, increase more rapidly in size.

Stiffness in poultry is generally caused by exposure to inclement weather, causing rheumatism.

Other things being equal, preference should be given to the older birds in selecting a breeding pen.

The closer the inbreeding, the more the care needed in selecting for breeders the best of the flock.

AVOID accidents—take no chances—buy your tires on Proof of Performance. Make sure that you and your family will be safe from skidding, blowouts and punctures caused most of the 37,000 accidents last year. Many of these accidents could have been avoided with safer tires.

The new Firestone High Speed Tire for 1936 is the safest driving equipment you can buy. Here is your proof:

PROOF OF GREATEST NON-SKID SAFETY

A leading university made 2,350 tire tests and found that the new scientifically designed Firestone High Speed tread stops a car up to 25% quicker than other tires.

PROOF OF GREATEST BLOWOUT PROTECTION

Every year, since Firestone developed the Gum-Dipped Balloon tire, Firestone Tires have been on the winning cars in the gruelling blowout test of the Indianapolis 500-Mile Race.

PROOF OF GREATEST ECONOMY

Firestone engineers designed the new Firestone High Speed Tire for 1936 to give you up to 50% longer non-skid mileage. This is proved by our own test fleet records and the fact that the world's largest transportation companies, such as Greyhound, to whom safety and tire economy means business efficiency, use Firestone Tires. This is further proof that they are the safest, most economical tires ever built.

Why risk an accident when it costs so little to protect lives worth so much? Equip your car today with new Firestone High Speed Tires—the Masterpiece of Tire Construction.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDED SENIOR COMMENCEMENT ON THURSDAY EVENING

Robinson, Of Mason City, Gave Address To Graduating Class

A large crowd was present at the school auditorium last Thursday evening to attend the 1936 commencement. J C Robinson of Mason City gave a fine address that had plenty of sound advice for the graduates

Supt D L. Hunter, who left on Saturday for Charter Oak, in presenting the class took the opportunity of thanking the school board and the people of Klemme for their co-operation during the time he has been here Mr Hunter's talks are usually quite short and to the point, but his talk Thursday evening was full of humor and the Seniors as well as the audience got a "big kick" out of his remarks

Short talks were given by Harriet Gibbs and Milvern Barz, salutorian and valedictorian, respectively The high school orchestra gave special numbers and diplomas were presented by H F Jost, president of the school board

Mrs John Muenchow presented diplomas to eighth grade graduates who were Roy Baack, Edith Bachman Arlene Blickenderfer Elsie Ward, Wayne Buseman, Dorance Grange Dwaine Johnson Elnor Schuldt and Marian Waterman

FARM WIVES OF TODAY HAVE MUCH MORE FREEDOM

With old-fashioned drudgery banished from her kitchen by modern equipment, and more than half her cooking hours lopped off by new facilities, today's farm wife is turning her attention toward greater cultural attainments and more recreation.

In all parts of the country, modern rural women are finding more time for educational pursuits, club life, reading, and numerous other activities that come with increased leisure time. Classes, both private and public, are attracting large numbers of these women who desire to acquire various arts and higher learning. In many places, the latest books and magazines, and literature of all types, are brought to rural communities in libraries on wheels, affording these areas the opportunities enjoyed by persons living near city libraries.

Much of this freedom from the farm kitchen is due to the development of the gasoline pressure stove which offers the rural resident all the advantages of the best city gas stoves. Where it formerly required hours of hard work for a farm woman to kindle a poky coal or wood fire and prepare a simple meal, she now takes only a few minutes to prepare any dish she likes. She has instant and intense heat at the strike of a match, and a simple turn of a valve gives her any cooking heat she desires.

Progressive rural women everywhere are enjoying hours of freedom their mothers scarcely dreamed of, and they are using those hours to attain richer, fuller lives for their own joy and the benefit of their families.

Bad Bill Sent to State's Attorney by Money Order

After a 100 mark note was confiscated as counterfeit by the authorities of a small town in North Bavaria, the village burgomaster reported the case in five closely-written pages. When the long report arrived in Munich the state attorney's office found that the bad 100-mark note had not been enclosed. A letter was dispatched to the burgomaster asking that the counterfeit note be sent on at once.

The telegraphic answer read: "Already sent you the bill two days ago by money order."—London Answers

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D.C.

Washington.—The Department of Agriculture and its stepchild, the Agricultural Adjustment administration, have launched the initial phase of the new soil conservation program. This, it will be remembered, is the agricultural benefit policy worked out to supersede the unconstitutional AAA, and the speed with which the department has developed the early phases of its new program is noteworthy. It has not wasted any time, nor could it waste time, in order to make the new program effective in this crop year.

Speed New Soil Program

While the work of policy making has gone on at an unusual speed for governmental procedure, I am afraid it cannot be said that the soundness of its program can be commended in the same manner.

Some of the soil building practices proposed under the new scheme of aid to the farmer undoubtedly will work out but there are others about which there is much doubt. Indeed, already it has been pointed out that certain of the practices proposed are vulnerable and are likely to lead to serious trouble both for agriculture and for the government.

More than a score of the states were included in the first set of rules and regulations governing soil building practices and rates of payment. The others are nearing completion and will be promulgated at an early date. But the first block of rules and regulations and rates of payment establish the general outline of the department's ideas and it can be said, I think, that in these rules and regulations (the government must lay down general provisions) lies the trouble. They are replete with that which we usually describe as red tape and red tape never has failed to cause trouble.

Practices for which farmers may receive payments vary from state to state. They include the new seeding of legumes and grasses, the plowing under of green manure crops, the planting of forest trees, the eradication of perennial noxious weeds and, in certain areas, a variety of special soil handling methods such as listing, strip cropping and fallowing, terracing or approved summer fallow. In addition, farmers in certain dry land areas have the option of substituting some of the practices for acreage of soil conserving crops.

In announcing the new practices and rates of payment, the Agricultural Adjustment administration declared that the policies follow in general the recommendations made to the Adjustment administration by the several state committees. It was declared that the sentiment throughout has been "to adapt the general plan to the specific needs of the states in conformity with the approved methods which have been tested by the land grant colleges, the experiment stations and soil conservation service." The Adjustment administration considered that these three agencies furnished the best basis, or the best foundation, for the construction of the generally new program. It follows, therefore, that a considerable part of the new setup comes by way of expansion of the old soil conservation service which has had much experience in that work. It cannot be said, however, that the new phases have been tested nor is it more than conjecture how the farmers themselves will take to the plans now offered.

Payment Rates Vary

Just as the soil conserving practices vary, so do the rates of payment as between the several states. It is the claim of the Adjustment administration that variation in rates "is due largely to variations in the cost of seed, in rates of seeding or to differences in the requirements with respect to soil building practices." Rates of payment for soil conservation on irrigated land are higher than for those on dry land and likewise long standing agricultural practices have been taken into account in calculating the rates to be paid in various sections to offset the greater or less expense to which farmers normally are put in producing their crops.

Generally in the dry land states, the seeding and growing of perennial legumes, such as alfalfa, will net the farmer about $2.00 per acre but in irrigated districts the rate of payment varies from $3.00 to $4.00 per acre.

For most states the rate for biennial legumes is $1.50 on non irrigated land and from $2.50 to $3.00 an acre on irrigated land. Rates of payment for growing sweet clover are somewhat less as are the rates of payment for growing annual legumes.

The rates for plowing under green manure crops are from $1.00 to $2.50 an acre, depending upon the amount of growth which is turned under. For planting forest trees on crop land, farmers are scheduled to be paid $5.00 an acre.

For weed eradication the program proposes to pay $5.00 an acre where only periodical cultivation is required but it will reward the farmer for taking out weeds by chemical treatment in addition to periodical cultivation by paying him $10.00 an acre. In addition to these methods of soil conservation, strip cropping and fallowing command about $1.00 an acre of benefit to the farmer while terracing will be paid for around the basis of $2.00 or $3.00 an acre.

Other states, as they are brought under the soil conservation program, may expect rates similar to these for the first half of the country. It is obvious, however, that in the more thickly populated areas where agriculture is carried on in a more concentrated way, new and different practices must be prescribed. It is certain, also, that these practices must be made to take into account the varying types of crops where farming is done on smaller acreage per farm or in the fruit and truck garden areas.

Opinions Differ

From this program, two sets of conclusions have been drawn. One school of thought maintains that the regulations are simple and easy of enforcement; the other group argues that it is utterly impossible to apply rules and regulations, administered from a central bureau in Washington, to the whole country and yet enable flexibility of management sufficient to meet the countless problems that will arise.

One conclusion is that by administration of the rules and regulations through state and county organizations and with the aid of state experiment stations, individual farmers can be advised and can work out their individual problems with ease. The other school of thought contends that this very fact means a perfect maze of different applications of the rules and regulations both as to language and intent; this group likewise maintains that favoritism will permeate the whole structure and that there will be injustice, ill will and politics in the way the local organizations deal with the farmers.

While the policy makers in the marble palace known as the Department of Agriculture contend that the soil conservation program will spell the end of surpluses and will accomplish better prices for what the farmers produce, another argument stresses the claim that the new program means dislocation of agricultural output and the market to which that output normally goes.

To go back a year or more, it can be recalled how the original AAA upset the apple cart for one after another of the farm crops. When land was withdrawn from cotton, it went to tobacco production and there was too much tobacco. There had to be tobacco control. When land was withdrawn from tobacco production, it went to peanuts and there had to be peanut control. And so it was with various other crops until there was a perfect network of crop control each, basically, working at something like a cross purpose with other things.

Find New Dislocations

As the new soil conservation plans unfold, those who doubt their efficacy point to numerous new dislocations that are comparable to those of the old AAA which I have just enumerated. For example, it is claimed, and there seems to be justice in the claim, the placing of a premium on growth of hay crops such as alfalfa, alsike and clover, can mean only an overabundance of those crops. I do not say that it is certain to occur but if conditions repeat themselves, the prices for hay crops in the market are due to fall. The law of supply and demand still governs regardless of theory and regardless of the attempts of bureaucrats to plan which the farmer shall or shall not grow. If world consumption falls low, crops of hay will be valuable. The chances, however, seem to be wholly in the other direction.

Time alone can tell how this thing will work out but I cannot believe any sound thinking person or any person who analyzes the program through to its ultimate end can say that it is free from weaknesses. The tragedy of the thing is that government is experimenting on the farmers. With that I am not in accord and never can be. Further, while I dislike to disparage honest efforts, I am afraid the new soil conservation program embodies some politics as well as efforts to help agriculture.

If it were a purely critical report of the soil conservation policies that I am making to you, I would be inclined to add to the above analysis the assertion that these plans embody too much organization. I have observed government administration from close at hand through a number of years. There is one conviction that I have gained. That conviction is that every time a new policy is proposed that requires the scattering of government-paid administrators, executives, field agents, inspectors and countless other nomadic individuals, clothed with official authority, throughout the country, just then does the policy fall of its purpose. Many hands may make light work but many heads, partly politicians, make a mess.

M. S. CHICHIBU MARU, PACIFIC OCEAN, JAPAN BOUND.

OUT of San Francisco, headed for the Orient, weather of the best, I proceed, in conformity with my invariable custom, to wangle a human interest chapter from the captain of this ship.

Not so easy! Penetrating to the forward cabin was simple enough, but tapping the well-springs of his memory was something else again. What did I wish to know? He touched a button. . . . Tea for two. Opposite me sat a chunk of a man, smiling inscrutably, waiting to be placed upon the spot. The gray in his closely cropped hair was a guarantee of his experience.

"One stirring story from your life before the mast or on the bridge will satisfy," I said, lifting my egg-shell teacup in salute.

His smile collapsed. "Nothing has occurred," he said, "nothing that is worth retelling. You shall see. At twenty I became a cadet on the government ship Taisei Maru, ran the gauntlet of official promotion, became captain of the Matsuyama Maru, Nippon Yusen Kaisha line, April 28, 1918, and have sailed under the N. Y. K. ever since, with one year of World war service."

The Torpedo Adventure.

Commander S. Oya glanced into the depths of his teacup, pushed a box of cigars toward me and lapsed into silence.

"No adventures at sea, no wrecks, no mutinies, no typhoons, no romance, nothing out of your recollections to offer me?" I asked.

"Nothing so far, but there is yet time. The future may have something to offer; who can say?"

"Possibly there is a detail or two that you have forgotten."

His eyeballs seemed suddenly to invert themselves, as though striving to look backward. The expression of inscrutability deepened.

"No, there is nothing—yes, there was an incident that now comes back to me. Just a moment, I will look at the log of my life and give you the date." The seadog reached into a drawer of his desk and brought forth a small leather-covered book.

Thought I, this begins to look more like the real thing. "Here it is," he continued; "June 15, 1907, 5:00 p. m., off Plymouth during the war; heavy seas running. From the main deck, astern, scanning the water, I saw a dark outline slipping toward the starboard quarter, perhaps a hundred yards distant . . . seventy-five yards, fifty yards, twenty-five yards, moving like a shadow. I leaned over the rail, certain that the time had come. The ship lifted in the tide, fell away; rose again from the trough, while the torpedo—and such it was—hesitated for a brief instant and then lunged onward The way of a ship at sea is indeed a mystery. Gathering herself like some living thing, she plowed ahead, just as the torpedo, fired from an invisible submarine at close quarters, slipped by ten feet astern and disappeared. Just that. . . . We berthed in safe water before midnight."

Commanded 27 Ships.

"There must be something else in the crisp leaves of this volume," I said, wondering why it contained column after column of Arabic figures, interspersed with notations in Japanese.

"Recording the number of miles sailed, names of the ships under my command and a few statistical notes," he volunteered.

"How many miles and how many ships, Commander?"

"Up to January 1, 1936, the grand total reached 1,289,810 nautical miles on twenty-seven vessels, none of which was lost while under my command. The first million miles were completed 11:40 p. m. March 2, 1931, off Sokotia island on a voyage to Suez via Colombo. Approximately 3,000 officers and men served on ships that I have had the honor to captain. During all of that period of time not a single man had to be put in irons. The furthest point north reached during my travels is Hamburg, Germany, and the furthest south is Adelaide, Australia. The maximum mileage for any one year was 69,470."

"Have you, throughout your voyaging ever observed a phenomenon at sea that could not be scientifically accounted for? Are there any insoluble mysteries hinted at in the log book? Have you developed any superstitions in your life as a sailor?"

"None. There is a reason for everything that may arise in human affairs. If there are sea serpents in the deep it has not been my privilege to behold them. Superstitions? . . ." With an expansive gesture, he tossed the whole theory into space.

"Married, of course?"

Again this realist, this methodical man who has logged his sea life with such meticulous care, turned the pages of the record. Presently his almond eyes sparkling, the mask of inscrutability swept from his face to make way for actual mirth, he placed an index finger on a single line.

"Yes, married . . . Kobe, Japan, May 28, 1914. One child, a daughter, also married, 1935. No grandchildren—as yet."

Six Babies in Three Days
World's Greatest Terror
Another Mild Bad Man
How to Avoid Thought

President Sacasa of Nicaragua confirms officially the statement that a very poor woman on the "distant shore of Lake Nicaragua has given birth to seven babies."

Arthur Brisbane

The mother, Mrs. Sinforosa Martinez, had a difficult time. The births stretched over three days—May 3, 4 and 5. The babies' names are, or were, Jose Jesus, Ramon del Carmen, Maria del Carmen, Socorro del Carmen, Maria de Jesus and Juana Ramona.

The seventh name was not telegraphed, for there was no seventh, as it was expected there would be. Five of the sextuplets are already dead. Only one, a girl, lives.

What would population of the earth be if such births were the rule and all lived?

At the opening of the Catholic press exhibition in Vatican City, Pope Pius, for the second time within two days, cautioned the world against communism, which he called "the great terror which threatens all the world."

Eor the comfort of those that live in dread of final Communist world conquest, it may be said that thus far nothing opposed to human nature has ever succeeded.

By the arrest in California of Thomas H. Robinson, Jr., kidnaper of Mrs. Stoll, Mr. Hoover and his G-men brought into the shadow of the electric chair the last of the group of dangerous criminals that have recently been wandering about the country.

This "bad man," like others recently gathered in, shook with fright when he found the gun pointed at him, made no effort to fight. When the guns are pointed the wrong way, "bad men" often change to good, meek and scared men.

Stamp collectors have held a celebration, grateful to Doctor Eckener for a new kind of stamp. How many ways man finds to keep busy and at the same time avoid thinking!

Collecting queer things, stamps or tear jugs; playing bridge, working cross-word puzzles, playing solitaire, rushing to the far corners of the world to spend money—usually not earned; going to Africa to kill big game animals. Those are some substitutes for thinking and working constructively, the only occupation worthy of a human being.

Mrs. James C. Canipe of Clovis, New Mexico, as a girl was not able to finish high school, but that did not discourage her. She waited some years. Then she joined the senior high school class with her son and daughter-in-law, and will graduate with them this month, among the most brilliant scholars.

Chancellor Hitler, who was never married, nevertheless thinks marriage a good idea. Young Nazis, in the public employ, have been told that unless they marry by the time they are twenty-six years old there is something the matter with their "courage and will power."

A syndicate is formed to seek the "buried gold bags of Alexander the Great," containing at least $300,000,000 in yellow wealth.

Alexander the Great's ghost might be surprised to hear about that. Alexander was too busy to collect gold, and not the kind of man to bury it in a hole.

Encouraged by her father, a sixteen-year-old high school girl walked onto the wing of a small plane, prepared for a first parachute jump, at 1,500 feet. The pilot perceived that the parachute cord had been pulled prematurely; pulled her back into the cockpit in time to save her from death.

Without requiring encouragement, Mrs. Harriet O. Hngue, eighty-six years old, flew the ocean on the Hindenburg return trip. Tell that to your friend who used to oppose female suffrage "because women are not brave like men."

Germany is building many fleets of small aircraft, and some day this country's automobile men will turn to airplane building; then, those already past sixty may live to see in the air 25,000,000 flying machines, one for every automobile on the ground.

The Italian flag flies over Halle Selassie's palace. He will never see that palace again, but he has boxes of gold bars with him and has moved to a safer, better climate.

The civilized world, whatever its attitude toward the slave-dealing alleged descendants of King Solomon and the Queen of Sheba, must rejoice in Mussolini's proclamation abolishing slavery throughout Ethiopia, where slaves have been the chief cash-producing product.

CLARICE WELLEMEYER AND JAMES CARLSON MARRIED LAST SUNDAY AFTERNOON

Will Make Future Home On Farm Near Ingram, Wisconsin

Clarice Wellemeyer and James G. Carlson were married Sunday afternoon, May 31st, in the Methodist church at Klemme, Iowa, before a large gathering of relatives and friends

The front of this beautiful church was decorated with bridal wreath and iris Candles lighted the altar and the choirloft. After Miss Nora Wellemeyer had lighted the candles, Mr Edw. Melcher and Mr Sheldon Cerwinske of Charles City sang "I would that my love' by Mendelsohn. "The Brown Bird Singing" by Wood Mr Melcher then sang two solos "Thou art like a flower" by Schumann, "I love Thee" by Grieg Miss Mildred Johnson presided at the Piano, and the Rev. Fred W Ortmeyer pronounced the words that made them man and wife.

The Bride was attired in White Satin and carried a bouquet of Calla Lillies. She was attended by her sister, Ruth, who wore yellow musiline-de-soi The groom was attended by his brother, Robert Carlson, both attired in dark blue The ushers were Homer Ortmeyer of Estherville and Clarence Lemke of Klemme

Following the ceremony a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents After refreshments were served the newly-weds left by auto amid a shower of rice and confetti

The bride, second daughter of Mr and Mrs Arthur Wellemeyer, was born and raised in Klemme She is a graduate of the Klemme High School, and after taking up training at Cedar Falls, has been a teacher in the Twin Lake schools for the past four years.

The groom, eldest son of Mr and Mrs G H Carlson of Ingram, Wis is also a native of this community, his parents being former residents of Avery township. He is a graduate of the Ingram, Wis., High School

The best wishes of their many Klemme friends go with this popular young couple, who are leaving at once for a farm near Ingram, Wis. where they will make their future home

District Convention To Be Held Here

R. N. A. CONVENTION WILL BE HELD IN KLEMME, JUNE 16

Mrs Grace McCurdy of Des Moines, Iowa, a member of the board of supreme managers of Royal Neighbors of America will be a guest of honor at a convention of Royal Neighbor camps, which will be held in Klemme, Iowa on Tuesday, June 16

For a number of years Mrs McCurdy has been one of the leaders in the progress of Royal Neighbors

MRS. GRACE McCURDY
of Des Moines, Iowa, member of board of supreme managers Royal Neighbors of Amercia of America as a fraternal benefit society. She has served on the board of supreme managers since 1928

Exhibition drills in the evening in the Klemme public park will feature the program. The fancy drill teams from Des Moines and Mason City will appear. The program will also include a school of instruction and class adoption.

A large attendance is expected in view of the visit of the supreme officer. Camp No 1645 of Klemme will act as host.

Attends Bankers Convention

Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Waterman and daughter, Marian, drove to Des Moines Tuesday morning, where Mr. Waterman attended a state meeting of bankers.

STATE PLANNING BOARD DOES CONSERVATION WORK

One of the most constructive pieces of conservation work is the riprapping of the shores of Crystal Lake. Sportsmen from the town of Crystal Lake and adjoining regions subscribed about $500 to provide for material and transportation. Relief workers supervised by a state planning board field man, have made much progress on the project An important item was the use of material found near the lake, with a minimum of transportation cost.

This work also will include widening the road around the southeast part of the lake by an additional six feet, to prevent further bank erosion and siltation of the lake, a major problem with all shallow lakes.

Clear Lake State Park Improved

Clear Lake State park has been the scene of considerable activity by relief workers under the direction of the park custodian and a planning board field man, getting the park ready for summer visitors. Benches and tables have been repaired, fallen limbs gathered up and the annual park house-cleaning conducted

The same crew completed planting the Clear Lake nursery pond to game cover in an attempt to establish permanent game cover for pheasants and partridge. Plantings made were several types of conifers and willows.

Paving Crew Leaves For Chapin

The last of the paving crew left Sunday for Chapin where the Carlson Construction Co will pave a stub into that town. The heavy machinery used on the Klemme job, was loaded the latter part of the week and shipped by rail to Chapin

There are still a number of men employed here to finish the grade and shoulder-work along the concrete slab, as this type of work must be done by hand.

The paving was opened the latter part of the week to traffic.

MORE IMPROVEMENTS NOTED

Art Katter has just had his farm home repainted the past week, which add greatly to the appearance of the Katter farm.

Wm Wenz will add a fine improvement to his farm south of Klemme on Highway 69 Mr Wenz is building a corn crib and granary 28x32, which will be completely equipped with a grain dump and overhead elevator Material and equipment is supplied by the Northern Lumber Co.

Art Kudje's home in Klemme is undergoing the process of having a new coat of pamt applied this week.

Light Vote Marked Primary Election

WILSON, REPUBLICAN; KRASCHEL, REMOCRAT, NOMINATED GOVERNOR

Dickinson Wins Nomination For U. S. Senator

Monday's primary election in Iowa was rather a quiet affair with light votes cast in nearly all precincts. Ell township contributed less than two hundred ballots, 158 being Republican, 28 Demorcrat, and 4 Farmer-Labor.

Win In County

The main fight in the county was for Sheriff, Recorder and Supervisor terms. For Sheriff "Dutch" Brower with 2368 votes defeated Juhl 446 and Valley 316

For Recorder, Christyna Callison barely nosed out Mrs. J. E. Tierney The result, Callison 1257, Tierney 1237 and Carr 553

In the race for the Supervisor term beginning 1937, G. E Klipping won with 1778 votes, while the others tallied as follows, Grell 549, Smith 430 and Buns 118

In the race for the trm beginning Jan 1938, Eckles defeated Oxley 1715 to 1158 votes.

Missal for auditor, McMillin for treasurer, Raw for clerk, Daly for Attorney, Lovrien for Representative, Robinson for Senator and Gilchrist for congress were unopposed on the ticket.

Win In State

For United States Senator Dickinson received over 40 percent of the votes in a field of six for the office. On the Democrat ticket Herring easily won the nomination.

For Governor, Wilson walked away from Grimes and Call, while Kraschel was an easy winner on the Democratic ticket.

The Republican Secretary of State goes to the convention, but Mrs. Miller was again selected on the Democratic ticket.

Frank Hanson, of Garner, was nominated on the Republican ticket for State Auditor by a large margin.

Democratic County Ticket

The only scrap on the county ticket was for the nomination for recorder. Maude Brugman, Garner with 199 votes won over Nina Drilling with 188 and Tillie Evans with 162.

Jas. Ross was nominated Sheriff and Paul Loth, Supervisor, 1937 term and E. P. Cook, Supervisor, 1838 term. Oscar Johnson was not opposed for Representative.

Will Be Battle This Fall

As the result now stands, republicans and democrats will go to the mat this fall: Sheriff, Brower vs. Ross; Recorder, Callison vs. Brugman; Supervisor, Klipping vs. Loth Eckles vs Cook; Representative, Lovrien vs. Johnson; and if the Democrats complete their ticket at the convention then there will be an allround battle in the county and state—may the best man win!

FIRST FREE TALKIE PICTURE WILL BE GIVEN SATURDAY

The first free, open air talking picture show of the season will be given in Klemme Saturday night of this week Bring your family and your friends and enjoy this special entertainment sponsored by the business places of Klemme.

ELECTRICITY FOR FARMS INTERESTS MANY IOWANS

Activities of farmers in more than half of the counties of Iowa have brought electric fans, automatic toasters and electrically driven cream separators and feed grinders a step nearer to the farm home

According to Harold H Beaty, extension agricultural engineer at Iowa State College, who is assisting with the REA program, more than 50 counties have held meetings to hear explanations of the program At least 28 have applied to the Rural Electrification Administration for loans to finance construction of lines.

Some Counties Making Surveys

Many of the counties that have not yet applied for a loan are making surveys to determine how many farmers will use electricity if high lines are built. Temporary organizations have been established to do this preliminary work. After potential users are signed up the organization will determine how many miles of line should be built, where they should be located and will apply for the loan. As soon as the REA has indicated that it will approve the project, a permanent cooperative association will be organized with charter, bylaws and articles of incorporation

Plan 25 to 700 Miles of Line

The size of the proposed projects varies in different counties from 25 to 700 miles of line construction The average cost of constructing a mile of rural line is about $1,000. The cost of maintenance and operation also varies considerably, but, according to Mr Beaty, will average about $18,000 a year for the average 100 mile line serving 300 customers This is an average of $60 per farm per year, of $5 a month, in return for which the farmer will receive about 100 kilowatt hours. Costs to the farmer will vary with the amount of energy used. This cost includes insurance, amortization of the loan, maintenance, operation, and cost of electrical energy. The money for the construction of lines is loaned by the REA at 3 percent interest and is to be paid back by the cooperatives, or other project sponsors, over a 20-year period.

LARGE CROWD ATTENDS ANNUAL MEMORIAL DAY SERVICES IN KLEMME

A large crowd was present to hear the Memorial Day program at the Klemme Park Saturday morning. Attorney Frank Senneff, of Britt, delivered a fine address in which he reviewed the history of the United States and told of why Memorial Day was being observed. Mr. Senneff paid a special tribute to Mr. Lew Lewis, Civil War veteran, when he asked the people to rise to their feet for just a moment in his honor. There are but two Civil War veterans remaining in Hancock County.

Following the park services the American Legion and Auxiliary conducted services at the cemetery and decorated graves of veterans.

Elderly Lady In Hospital With Fractured Hip

Grandma Lemke, mother of Ferdinand Lemke southeast of Klemme, had the misfortune to fall Monday afternoon, while at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Zimmerman. She was taken to the Park Hospital at Mason City after an examination disclosed the fact that her hip was factured.

Municipal Bankruptcy Act Held Invalid

FIVE justices of the United States Supreme court held invalid the municipal bankruptcy act of 1934, declaring it to be an unwarranted invasion of state sovereignty. Four justices dissented, these being Chief Justice Hughes and Justices Stone, Brandeis and Cardozo. The majority opinion was written by Justice James C. McReynolds. The case was brought by bondholders of a water improvement district in Texas.

The municipal bankruptcy act was designed to permit cities and other political subdivisions which found themselves in financial straits to effect a composition, with the approval of two-thirds of the bondholders or other creditors, whereby the indebtedness could be readjusted, scaled down, or, as Mr. Justice McReynolds put it, "repudiated."

Frank Lowden May Be Republican Nominee

"FRANK O. LOWDEN of Illinois will be the choice of the Republican convention for President if he will accept the nomination."

Frank O. Lowden

That was the confident prediction of a political observer who is usually well informed and close to sources of national party news. He declared there was a steadily growing demand from many parts of the Union for the nomination of the former governor of Illinois, who always has been popular with farmers and whose qualities of statesmanship are recognized generally throughout the country. Mr. Lowden is vigorous and hale, and he is always actively interested in the welfare of his state and nation, especially in the problems of the agriturist.

Landon Has Large Block of Delegates

GOV. ALF LANDON captured nearly all the New Jersey delegates to the national convention, defeating Senator Borah about 4 to 1 in the popular vote. This victory gave the Kansan a total of more than 200 votes to start with at Cleveland, and his manager, John Hamilton, claimed he would have at least 300 of the 501 votes necessary to nominate and would win on the second or third ballot.

James A. Farley, postmaster general and also Democratic national chairman, told the Michigan Democratic convention he believed the Republican Presidential nominee will be "the governor of a typical prairie state" and that his election, if he won, would be a "perilous experiment." Farley criticized the man he did not name as devoid of experience in national affairs, and predicted that if he is the Republican standard bearer "even Kansas" will not be in the Roosevelt doubtful column.

Plan to Continue Rail Co-Ordinator's Office

THE office of transportation co-ordinator, held by Joseph B. Eastman, is due to expire on June 10, but Senator Wheeler of Montana had ready for introduction a resolution extending it for two years, and President Roosevelt was on record as approving some of its activities.

J. B. Eastman

It was reported in Washington that railway management and labor, both of which have opposed some of Eastman's doings in the past, might unite in an effort to block extension of the office, but Eastman said he had heard "nothing substantial" on that line.

Eastman announced last February he would exercise his powers to compel railroads in 11 cities to carry out terminal unifications as economy and efficiency moves. He withheld the orders at the suggestion of President Roosevelt, however, to permit rail management and labor to agree on some plan of protection for employees thrown out of work in such consolidations.

Bonus Baby Bonds Will Be Mailed June 15

ON JUNE 15 the bonus baby bonds will be mailed to 45,000 post offices from Washington and from the eleven federal reserve centers. Final plans for delivering the bonds to the veterans were announced by Postmaster General Farley, who predicted that payment on a great majority of them would be made within one week.

Mail carriers have been given instructions to "go out of their way wherever necessary with a view to effecting delivery," Farley said. The bond packets must be delivered to the veteran in person, and not to another person or firm at the veteran's address.

"If it is impossible to locate the veteran to whom the bonds are addressed," Farley continued, "they will be held for 30 days at the post office of destination before being returned to the respective federal reserve centers and thence to the Treasury department."

The bonds will be in $50 denominations with accompanying checks to cover the odd amounts. To collect cash, the veteran must have his bonds certified through his local post office.

Post offices in 241 cities have been designated as paying centers for their districts, and 59 large city offices have been empowered to pay on bonds issued outside their own districts.

Congress Hopes It Can Adjourn June 6

DEMOCRATIC and Republican leaders in congress sought unitedly to get through the necessary business so that the law makers might adjourn on June 6. The house had finished its work and was waiting for the senate to act on the relief and tax measures. The committees had so revised those bills that it was thought opposition would be greatly lessened.

Senator Harrison's finance committee contrived a tax bill estimated to produce $026,000,000 in new permanent revenue, which is $0,000,000 more than the President asked for. Tentatively the committee agreed to levy a processing tax of one-half cent per pound on sugar, which would yield $66,000,000, and to retain a provision of the house bill designed to induce liquidation of corporations and bring in $33,000,000 in additional income taxes. There was a prospect of adding still another $40,000,000 to the permanent revenue by removing the existing $40,000 estate tax exemption on estates of $100,000 or more.

This would make a total of $600,000,000, in new permanent revenue, $46,000,000 more than that of the house bill, but the senate bill also included $100,000,000 in temporary revenue from the so-called "windfall" provision to confiscate unpaid and refunded processing taxes, and retained the $168,000,000 now produced by the excess profits and capital stock taxes.

Leon Blum Is the Idol of the French Reds

LEON BLUM, elderly and rather fragile leader of the French Socialists, will soon be premier of his country, and he is going to have a hard time living up to the expectations of all the leftists, who are making a national hero of him. The other day hundreds of thousands of French reds and pinks marched behind Blum or stood cheering on the sidelines, and pictures of the leader were carried in the ranks or sold by hawkers in the crowds. This was on the occasion of the traditional memorial ceremony in Pere Lachaise cemetery for the Marxist martyrs of the Paris Commune in 1871.

Leon Blum

M. Blum is said to be watching closely his publicity in the United States since his speech in which he intimated a desire to agree with Washington on the elimination of war debt discussions. He is hoping to be able to obtain loans from New York bankers. The Johnson law is naturally an insurmountable obstacle to France's obtaining any kind of credit in America, but as the Paris Midi pointed out Blum went out of his way to declare that France has not forgotten the war debt and fully expects to bring it up for discussion some time in the future.

Socialists Gain Control of Belgian Parliament

SOCIALISTS of Belgium, like those of France, won a considerable victory in the parliamentary elections, holding a larger number of seats than any other group. Emile Vandervelde, their seventy-year-old leader, was thus in position to succeed Paul Van Zeeland as premier.

The new party of Rexists, whose political emblem is a cardboard broom, symbolizing determination to "sweep banksters and politico-financiers out of office," recorded sensational successes, winning 21 seats, mainly at the expense of conservative Catholics.

Official standings, subject possibly to slight revision, gave: Socialists, 70; Catholics, 63; Liberals, 23; Rexists, 21; Flemish Nationals, 10; Communists, 9.

Norman Thomas Nominated by the Socialists

FOR the third time Norman Thomas is the Presidential nominee of the Socialist party. He was selected at the national convention in Cleveland, Ohio, and George Nelson of Wisconsin was put in second place on the ticket. There was a great demonstration after the voice vote, but it was not joined in by the right wing leaders from several eastern states who were angered by the seating of a leftist delegation from New York. The disaffected ones threatened to form another party. The convention flatly turned down a proposal from Earl Browder, general secretary of the Communist party, for a "united front" in the 1936 campaign.

Italy Celebrates Entry Into World War

ITALIANS celebrated the anniversary of their country's entrance into the World war with imposing ceremonies that included the promotion of more than half a million boys and girls in the organizations of young Fascists. Premier Mussolini presided over the "graduation," and after reviewing a great military parade, the Duce told the shouting crowds:

"The spectacle of the force of youth exhibited this morning on the anniversary of our intervention in the World war, the first phase of the Fascist revolution, has been magnificent and a warning at the same time. We are preparing the young armies of tomorrow for defense of the empire. Since they are animated by the Fascist spirit they will be invincible. This is the law of the revolution. This is the supreme will of the whole Italian people."

While his conqueror was thus engaged, Haile Selassie, deposed emperor of Ethiopia, was embarking at Haifa, Palestine, for England, on the British destroyer Capetown.

Dr. Townsend Disgusted With Inquiry

FOR two days Dr. Francis E. Townsend replied mildly to the questions of the house committee investigating the activities of the organization behind the old age pension movement which the doctor started. Then the Californian lost his patience suddenly, refused to answer any more "nonsensical" queries, spoke of "thickheaded congressmen," denounced the committee for its "unfriendly attitude" and asserted the administration was a "hostile force" behind the inquiry. He declared he would form a third party after the November elections.

Dr. F. E. Townsend

Finally Doctor Townsend told the committee: "I am retiring from this sort of inquisition and I do not propose to come back except under arrest. And I do refuse absolutely to make any further statement regarding this movement to this committee."

Escorted by Gerald K. Smith, former adherent of Huey Long, and another man, the Californian fled from Washington to Baltimore. The committee decided to ask the house to cite him for contempt.

Russia Will Maintain Big Far Eastern Fleet

CONVERSATIONS between Great Britain and Russia now going on in London will have to do only with naval armaments in European waters, for the Soviet government has announced that it cannot consider limitation of its far eastern fleet while there is no similar agreement binding Japan.

Speaking for the government, Karl Radek said in the newspaper Izvestia that the Soviet union has been striving to conclude a separate agreement with Japan, but thus far the efforts have been fruitless.

Japan Has New Leader in North China

JAPANESE penetration in North China is now being managed by a Buddhist scholar, Major General Matsumuro, who replaces Lieut. Gen. Kenji Doihara. The new man will co-operate with the commander of the North China garrison in placing the thousands of reinforcements that have been arriving at Tientsin.

According to the Chinese, one of Matsumuro's duties will be to prepare the way for a return to Peiping of Henry Pu-Yi, now Emperor Kang Teh of Manchukuo, to reoccupy China's dragon throne. They assert the Japanese plan to establish his rulership over all of North China and Manchukuo.

Austria Now Has Three National Leaders

BENITO MUSSOLINI advised Prince von Starhemberg of Austria not to start any domestic trouble because he was ousted from the cabinet by Chancellor Schuschnigg, and when the prince returned to Vienna the cabinet fixed things up neatly by decreeing that the country should have three fuehrers. Schuschnigg, the unofficial dictator, becomes national leader of the fatherland front; Eduard Baar von Barenfels, the new vice chancellor, is national commander of the front militia; and Starhemberg continues as sports leader and head of the Northerhood Protective association.

Gov. Lehman Won't Run for Re-Election

HERBERT H. LEHMAN announced suddenly in Albany that he would not be a candidate for a third term as governor of New York, saying: "I feel the time has come when I may ask release from the cares and responsibilities of the governorship." But leaders of the Democratic party, including President Roosevelt, National Chairman James A. Farley and Senators Wagner and Copeland undertook to persuade Mr. Lehman to run for re-election. They all agreed that his retirement would be a loss to the state and the party and that he should be "drafted."

Gov. Lehman

The immediate political result of the governor's surprise action was that New York again became a doubtful state for the Presidential campaign, in the minds of many politicians

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted by William Bruckart

National Press Building — Washington, D. C.

Washington.—A week or ten days ago, the name of Frank O. Lowden was scarcely whispered around where politicians foregathered. They talked about the forthcoming Republican National convention and they mentioned Governor Landon of Kansas; Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, and others, but never was the name of Lowden mentioned.

"Draft Lowden"

In the short space of a fortnight, there has come first a whisper of the name of Lowden, then a mention of him as a possible Republican nominee and finally a full voice that approximates a "draft Lowden" movement.

A few weeks ago I reported to you in these columns that the prospects were very good for the Republican National convention to turn to a dark horse. There was no name at that time upon which anyone could pin a prediction but there were circumstances, undercurrent in character, that seemed to point the way to the nomination of a man not then in the forefront of political prognostications.

Of course, with the Republican convention delegates pledged and unpledged here, there, and everywhere, it is possible for almost anything to happen but my information is that the leaders desire most of all to avoid a bitter battle. They wish to avoid the very thing which New Deal political strategists have been seeking to foment. Only the final ballot will tell the story, of course, but it does appear at this time that the Republican leadership may display some good horse sense and seek to accomplish a nomination without splitting their party wide open.

This "draft Lowden" movement has come on with almost startling suddenness as I have indicated above. It has resulted from the fact, apparently, that Mr. Lowden, while he was governor of Illinois a number of years ago and since that time, has built up for himself a record as a friend of agriculture. Thus, the strategy would seem to be that the Republican leadership is turning to a man who can give President Roosevelt a run for his money in the farm belt states.

As far as I know, Mr. Lowden has not been consulted respecting the nomination. It would seem, however, that if he were nominated he would accept despite the fact that he has not sought the nomination in any way nor has he been very active in politics since he sought the nomination for the Presidency in 1920. It was on that occasion, it will be remembered, that he and the late General Leonard Wood fought through into a convention deadlock and Warren G. Harding of Ohio finally was nominated as a compromise candidate.

It is difficult to see how the conservative element in the Republican party could refuse to back Mr. Lowden and it is equally difficult to see how the farm representation and the liberals in the party could withhold their support when the Lowden farm record is considered. But all of this represents subject matter that must await convention action because, after all, there are still other candidates who have blocks of delegates behind them and they may be unwilling to withdraw unless they are satisfied with the dark horse that finally trots out onto the convention platform.

One hears more and more discussion in Washington these days of the tax muddle in which President Roosevelt has found himself. I think it is fair to say that his prestige has suffered considerably from the way his proposed tax increase was handled and I think it is the general consensus that this year's tax bill was a proposition to which the President gave too little thought.

Tax Muddle

Sometime in the future, the history of the New Deal will be written in a clear and comprehensive manner. The story then will show in retrospect that which we can hardly understand now—the good and the bad in the bewildering adventures attempted under the policies of reform and recovery. I believe those who write that history will dwell upon the 1936 tax legislation as one of the important political weaknesses developed by Mr. Roosevelt.

As far as I know, there has never been a public official who has been entirely consistent at all times in his methods and policies. Mr. Roosevelt, being human, has been inconsistent like all of the rest and there was no reason to expect that he would be the one exception despite the fact that some of his followers maintain that he cannot make mistakes.

But to link the tax legislation with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is human, let me call attention to the further fact that he has been bold, even daring, in many of his moves. Where his quick decisions have been sound, the country has been benefited. Where he has made mistakes by acting too quickly, his spokesmen have sought to deny that there were errors.

The reason I have called attention to Mr. Roosevelt's mistakes on the tax legislation is chiefly to show something of a new awakening on the part of the general public. The way in which the senate took the tax bill that had passed the house and turned it topsy-turvy, casting out the administration's experimental levy on corporate surpluses, shows better than anything I can say how the voice of public opinion again is being heard in Washington. The "voice of the people," so often referred to by the politicians, was heard quite clear and strong by the senators and the result was a complete reversal of the position which the President desired them to take.

Now, the point is this: if Mr. Roosevelt had done as he has done on numerous occasions, he could have avoided the situation that has reacted unfavorably to him. It will be recalled that several times the President has tried out his theories on various governmental problems and has studied the popular reaction to his trial balloons. He did not do this with the tax bill. He left the job of drafting the legislation to the treasury and the treasury, being populated with a number of men who have no conception whatsoever of business practices and care little for American traditions, produced a piece of legislation that would have forever prevented any business unit from saving funds to carry it through times of depression, the proverbial rainy day.

Here's the Point

In the discussions around Washington, it is frequently stated that had Mr. Roosevelt taken his so-called tax experts into a room and made them explain the character of the bill they were presenting, much of the difficulty would have been averted. But he did not use this foresight and the result is now history. He has alienated a considerable amount of congressional support that he ordinarily could have for the mere asking.

As the tax legislation stands, it is nothing more nor less than a makeshift boost in rates. It has added nothing at all to strengthen the nation's general taxation policies. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a general study of the tax structure with the idea in mind that a wholesale revision should take place and that scientific methods should be employed. We must not forget that we have a national debt of more than thirty-one billions and that several other billions in securities are really to be counted in since those obligations are guaranteed by the United States. That debt must be paid eventually and the revenue must be raised in the only way that the federal government can get its money, namely, by taxation. The conclusion, therefore, is inescapable that we face heavy taxation and we may as well face the music.

It may be that all of the twenty-one billions in tax payments and borrowed money which Mr. Roosevelt has expended can be justified in every respect. It may be that in future years the nation will be grateful that this era of extravagance is a part of our history, but the fact still remains that when a government or an individual borrows money, that money must be returned to those who hold the evidence of the debt.

The civil service commission lately has compiled some statistics indicating that the merit system in the federal government is being pushed aside at an alarming rate. The commission's figures show how every President since Arthur in 1883 has expanded the scope of the classified civil service during his administration until the administration of President Roosevelt.

U. S. Pay Roll Grows

It would be a list much too long to record here how the number of employees of the federal government has increased each year as the government has expanded but as a matter of history it struck me as interesting to see how 41.5 per cent of employees of the federal government under President McKinley held their jobs under the civil service system and laws and how this percentage increased to 61.5 per cent under President Taft; to 72 per cent under President Wilson; to 79.8 per cent under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and to 80.1 per cent under President Hoover.

By the end of June, 1935, the number of civil service employees in the federal government amounted to only 63.3 per cent of the total number and, while the civil service commission has not tabulated the record for this year, I understand reliably that the ratio will be about 57 per cent of the total.

The total number of employees of the federal government has grown consistently since the turn of the century when it stood at 256,000. In Taft's administration, the total was 370,000. President Wilson's first administration employed 438,000 and then with the advent of the World war the government expanded its personnel to its highest point, 917,000.

As the war agencies were liquidated, the number of employees declined obviously until during the Harding and Coolidge administrations the highest point reached was 540,000. The Hoover administration numbered 583,000 on the pay rolls but the election of President Roosevelt immediately brought on greater numbers and by June 30, 1935, there were 719,000 on the federal pay roll and this number was further increased to 806,000 at the end of March this year.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

Start using these delicious, effective anti-acid, gently laxative wafers today.

Italy Celebrates Entry Into World War

ITALIANS celebrated the anniversary of their country's entrance into the World war with imposing ceremonies that included the promotion of more than half a million boys and girls in the organizations of young Fascists. Premier Mussolini presided over the "graduation," and after reviewing a great military parade, the Duce told the shouting crowds:

"The spectacle of the force of youth exhibited this morning on the anniversary of our intervention in the World war, the first phase of the Fascist revolution, has been magnificent and a warning at the same time. We are preparing the young armies of tomorrow for defense of the empire. Since they are animated by the Fascist spirit they will be invincible. This is the law of the revolution. This is the supreme will of the whole Italian people."

While his conqueror was thus engaged, Haile Selassie, deposed emperor of Ethiopia, was embarking at Haifa, Palestine, for England, on the British destroyer Capetown.

Dr. Townsend Disgusted With Inquiry

FOR two days Dr. Francis E. Townsend replied mildly to the questions of the house committee investigating the activities of the organization behind the old age pension movement which the doctor started. Then the Californian lost his patience suddenly, refused to answer any more "nonsensical" queries, spoke of "thickheaded congressmen," denounced the committee for its "unfriendly attitude" and asserted the administration was a "hostile force" behind the inquiry. He declared he would form a third party after the November elections.

Dr. F. E. Townsend

Finally Doctor Townsend told the committee: "I am retiring from this sort of inquisition and I do not propose to come back except under arrest. And I do refuse absolutely to make any further statement regarding this movement to this committee"

Escorted by Gerald K. Smith, former adherent of Huey Long, and another man, the Californian fled from Washington to Baltimore. The committee decided to ask the house to cite him for contempt.

Russia Will Maintain Big Far Eastern Fleet

CONVERSATIONS between Great Britain and Russia now going on in London will have to do only with naval armaments in European waters, for the Soviet government has announced that it cannot consider limitation of its far eastern fleet while there is no similar agreement binding Japan.

Speaking for the government, Karl Radek said in the newspaper Izvestia that the Soviet union has been striving to conclude a separate agreement with Japan, but thus far the efforts have been fruitless.

Japan Has New Leader in North China

JAPANESE penetration in North China is now being managed by a Buddhist scholar, Major General Matsumuro, who replaces Lieut. Gen. Kenji Doihara. The new man will co-operate with the commander of the North China garrison in placing the thousands of reinforcements that have been arriving at Tientsin.

According to the Chinese, one of Matsumuro's duties will be to prepare the way for a return to Peiping of Henry Pu-Yi, now Emperor Kang Teh of Manchukuo, to reoccupy China's dragon throne. They assert the Japanese plan to establish his rulership over all of North China and Manchukuo.

GUM-DIPPED TIRES WIN INDIANAPOLIS 500 MILE RACE

Last Saturday Louis Meyer broke the track record, at 109 miles per hour, driving the entire race without tire trouble of any kind. He is the only driver ever to win the race three times, and has always used Firestone Tires.

No tires except Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires could have resisted the terrific heat generated at such high sustained speeds on the hot brick track, lap after lap, hour after hour. You can have no greater proof of blowout protection.

Not one of the thirty-three drivers would risk his life on any other tire, for each driver knows that heat is the chief cause of tire failure and blowouts. Firestone cords are soaked in liquid rubber, which saturates and coats every cotton fiber, preventing friction and heat and adding great strength. This is the Firestone patented process of Gum-Dipping, that gives you greatest blowout protection and safety

Profit by the experience of race drivers. Equip your car today with Firestone Gum-Dipped Tires—it costs so little to protect lives worth so much.

"Six Men in a Boat"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

IT ISN'T often that heroes get the medals they deserve for their brave deeds, but here's one that did. He is John Garnish of Brooklyn, N. Y., and if the reward is any criterion of the deed, John must have done the most heroic act of the century.

He got, not just one medal, but two. And in addition, he was presented with a gold watch and two life saving certificates.

Now I've got you wondering what a man could do to deserve all that stuff for one act of heroism. Well, John just threw away his life, that's all. He just tossed it out on the waters—chucked it into the laps of the Fates. And it was nothing but dumb luck—or maybe an act of Providence—that it came floating back to him.

It was September 9, 1922. The Lamport and Holt line steamship Euclid picked up an S O S call from the Hamburg-American liner Harmonia. It was 6 a. m. and a storm was raging in the Bay of Biscay, through which the Euclid was plowing its way, but the S O S was urgent—the Harmonia was sinking rapidly—and the Euclid was only a few hours' run away. The skipper ordered the ship about and set the men who were off duty to lowering all available Jacob's ladders over the side and making them fast.

Stricken Ship Wallows in the Heavy Seas.

John Garnish was a fireman on the Euclid. He was one of the men off duty and working on the Jacob's ladders. He saw the whole rescue from start to finish, and wound up by getting right into the thick of it.

The Euclid reached the Harmonia at 9:30 a. m. after having fought its way through a sea that had seriously injured one of the sailors. "What a sight she was," says John. "I have been through the World war in the merchant marine—have seen ships torpedoed and sunk—have watched oil tankers burst into flame, drop out of the convoy and go to the bottom. But the Harmonia is one ship I'll never forget.

"As we approached her, she was lying on her starboard side, her rails almost in the water. The lifeboats on her port side were useless on account of the list. Of the starboard boats, only a few had been able to get away because of the heavy sea. We saw dozens of corpses floating in the water. But the storm made it impossible for us to lower our own boats. We could only stand by and wait.

Craven Crew Seeks Refuge in Life Boats.

"A lifeboat from the Harmonia came toward us, and our skipper saw that it was filled with members of the crew. He ordered them to go back and rescue women and children. Instead, they scrambled and fought for the ladders until our skipper brought the ship around to the weather side and their boat was swamped by the heavy sea."

It was one of those disgraceful things that happen ever so often in sea disasters. The captain of the Euclid gave orders to fish the panic-stricken sailors out of the water, and turned to the chief officer. "I won't order my men to take a boat out in that sea," he said, "but if any of them want to volunteer, they can go ahead."

John Garnish heard him say that. So did another fireman. Both of them volunteered on the spot. John wasn't the only hero on that boat that day, nor the only man to earn—and deserve—watches, life-saving certificates and a flock of medals. Three more sailors and the chief officer joined with them, and they lowered a boat into the raging sea.

Heroic Volunteers Risk Lives in Desperate Rescue Venture.

The wind and waves buffeted the little boat about like a cork. The six men in her were tossed high in the air on the crest of every wave until it seemed little short of miraculous that their cockleshell boat wasn't capsized and swamped. They fought like fiends against the power of the Atlantic, and at length they reached the stricken liner.

"We came close under her stern," says John, "and soon discovered that this was a mistake, for the sea was washing up on her well deck. We pulled out again, and came back in amidships. I caught one of her port holes with a boat hook, and a sailor grabbed one of the blocks that was dangling over the side from her davits. Passengers now started jumping from the saloon deck. Many of them missed the boat and landed in the water, but we got them. We started back for our ship loaded down with 40 people, and I never thought we'd be able to make it.

"Half way between the two ships we saw an upturned boat with four women and a little girl clinging desperately to the bottom. It was a pitiable sight, but we could do nothing until we had unloaded our passengers. However, we reached the ship safely, got all our people aboard, and then set out to aid the upturned boat."

John Rated a Flock of Medals for This Feat.

That was the most terrible part of the whole adventure. The men at the oars were already exhausted by their grueling trip to the Harmonia, but they rowed on until they reached the upturned lifeboat.

After a bitter fight they got there—pulled the castaways into their boat and brought them safely back to the ship. Then, the brave crew of that little boat dragged themselves aboard the Euclid with the cheers of the people they had rescued ringing in their ears.

Other ships began appearing on the scene now, and helped with the rescue work. The Harmonia sank, and the captain, the last man aboard, was rescued by the crew of the Kingsford Castle. But a hundred lives had been lost in the excitement and panic that reigned aboard the stricken vessel before the Euclid had reached the scene.

Light, Sound Waves Are Measured by Scientists

Most of our knowledge of the world about us is conveyed to our senses by two types of waves, those of light and those of sound. These waves differ in detail from each other and also from the waves of the ocean or the ripples in a tub of water; nevertheless they all possess some characteristics in common.

Briefly, writes Dr. Thomas M. Beck, in the Chicago Tribune, wave motion implies the following basic qualities: It is a manifestation of energy. It moves at a constant speed through a given medium. And, most important of all, as it passes a particular point the energy undergoes fluctuations that repeat themselves at regular intervals.

It took more than a century of scientific argument and experimentation after the idea was first advanced to establish beyond doubt the wave nature of light. No such trouble was necessary in the case of sound. In fact, the wave nature of sound is almost self-evident. We have all noticed at some time or another the definite time interval required for the sound of a distant event to reach our ears. This shows that sound moves at definite speed. We can also detect rapid and regular vibrations in bodies producing sounds, which indicates that sound is of a periodic nature.

The final and perfect test of a wave's existence, however, is the phenomenon of interference. When two waves are superimposed so that their crests and troughs coincide, then the total effect is equal to the sum of their individual intensities. When, however, they are superimposed so that the crest of one meets the trough of the other then they cancel each other and their net effect is equal to their difference.

IN GUADALAJARA

Skin Peddler in Guadalajara.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

GUADALAJARA, venerable city of Mexico's west, is one of Mexico's tourist meccas.

Sleepers run from Los Angeles through Guadalajara. Rails also link the city with the sea at Manzanillo; still another system ties it with Mexico City, with the Gulf of Mexico, and the Texas border. These railways, with the nation's steadily growing net of motor highways, make Guadalajara an active distribution center. Here cheap electric power, ample labor, and abundant raw materials stimulate various industries. These include spinning and knitting mills, candy and cracker works, and shops famous for their beautiful tiles and mosaics.

The arcades that shade the sidewalks before stores facing a plaza shelter many street venders. A hat peddler walks majestically along, with 15 or 20 hats for sale, stacked on his own head, one atop the other, like a pagoda. Another carries a long string of sandals. Some are of straw, others of rawhide, and a few made from old automobile tires cut into soles.

Country peons usually wear baggy white drawers; but custom now decrees that this badge of rural servitude shall not be worn in Guadalajara streets. So, at the edge of the city, "pants shops" are open where trousers may be rented. Just check your drawers there and rent a pair of pants, as impecunious American students may rent evening clothes for a party! Changing sartorial standards, however, are destroying this simple industry.

Indians arrive in the city with baskets of assorted fruits, guavas, gourds, tiny lemons, cactus pears and mangoes. On the pavement they arrange little piles—one kind of fruit here, another there; then they squat down, silently awaiting buyers. If you want fruit, buy it, but don't ask questions.

Toys, candies, soft drinks, postcards, newspapers, pottery, medallions of the saints, small melons white on one side like a fish's belly—everything from mule gear and old tools to carved-wood sticks ending in ornate filigree balls for stirring chocolate—are spread out for sale on the sidewalk.

Good Merchandise in the Stores.

Inside the large stores, of course, is modern merchandise. Some American women, wise in local ways, say that if the stores don't carry the particular hat or gown they wish, clever native women soon make them—copying, if need be, from no more than a picture from an American fashion journal. Most lingerie, dress goods, millinery, soaps, perfume, and jewelry are sold by French merchants. Machinery, hardware, and such heavy goods are usually handled by Germans.

Few Americans are found in retail trade; they, with the British, are more interested in mines, ranches, power plants, railways, or banks.

If you buy any sizable article in a store, the merchant whistles up a street porter to carry it home for you. Persons of position would lose caste carrying a big parcel through the streets. Porters even carry big bags of silver coin to and from the banks—and for some reason are seldom molested.

As you walk the streets of Guadalajara at Easter time, you may see a dummy man, in top hat and morning coat, in a general's uniform or merely in rags, hanging from a telephone wire. Suddenly the effigy explodes, from a small bomb hidden within, and bursts into flame. Then the street crowd laughs and yells, and maybe even shoots at the effigy, which is supposed to represent Judas. Burning him in effigy at this time is a Mexican practice. Sometimes "Judas" is stuffed with bananas or candy which fall out when he blows up, and street urchins scramble for the street.

"Buy your dead man's bread here," a baker's sign may read around All Souls' day. At that time, some Mexicans believe, the spirits of departed relatives return to dine with their families. The dining table becomes an altar, and some foods are served in strange shapes, such as candy skulls, big and little, with cherries for eyes, ribs and leg bones made of chocolate, or cakes baked in the form of coffins.

Many churches in Mexico were built on sites of ancient Aztec temples, the heads of whose idols were cut off by zealous Spaniards. In some churches fragments of heathen idols are built in to the walls. After the conquest, Spain built literally thousands of Mexican churches. They dominate Guadalajara.

Devotion of the Peons.

Horses and rebels were housed in some of these churches, with priests and nuns deported during the revolutions. But the faithful carried on. Pious peons came for miles on their knees to the churches. Old women, shouting the chants and litanies or counting their beads, crawled to the altars on stiff old knees. Girls knelt with crowns of thorns on their brows, and small boys clutched at the crucifixes.

From Guadalajara out to the suburban church of Zapopan is but a short trip by tramcar; but during an August feast peons hobble out to it on their knees, taking all day. When prayers are over they stage a costume play depicting the Spanish conquest of Jalisco. Then Indian players dress and act the parts of Spanish knights and the local Indian characters of that conflict. In recent years education has been taken away from the church, and the new generation tends to abandon these mimetic dances and dramatic rituals.

The chief edifice in Guadalajara is the cathedral; its twin towers rise over the city, visible for miles. On feast days long strings of lights illuminate the towers, and at Easter the bishop washes the feet of twelve old men, chosen at random from street crowds.

Rushing to aid the king of Spain in the Peninsular war went many men of Guadalajara. Legend says money was sent, too, raised by melting gold and silver plate and candlesticks from the cathedral. In gratitude the king gave this church Murillo's great painting, "The Assumption of the Virgin," still hanging in the cathedral though many attempts have been made to buy or purloin it.

Bull-Fighting Loses Popularity.

The bull ring is here, of course; but such sports as boxing, football, and baseball have robbed it of old-time popularity. Despite its continuous appeal to the peon, who glories in its cruel, gory combats, and survival of a few other habitues, bull-fighting as a business is on the decline.

Bulls from Spain are still sent to Mexico City, where tourists help support the arena, and some fighting animals are still raised on the West coast ranches for Guadalajara. One of these is the old Rancho San Jose de Conde, in Navarit, which dates from 1550. It is one of America's oldest ranches. Its output of small, black, savage bulls went on for generations. To perpetuate the fighting instinct, the rule on this ranch was "Kill every bull calf that does not seem to hate men." Such a plan insures a bull ferocious as any wild animal. One young bull on this ranch chased a vaquero up a tree and kept him treed till he nearly died of thirst.

When Cortez conquered Montezuma and founded "New Spain," he had with him one Don Nuno de Guzman, who soon rose to power and grew jealous of his chief. Eager to gain more honors and riches for himself, De Guzman, in 1529, quit the Aztec capital, with picked Spanish troops and many Tlaxcaltecan Indian allies, to explore the unknown regions farther west and north. In their travels, De Guzman and his lieutenant, Cristobal de Onate, came upon a huge Indian stronghold, Nochistlan. Fighting ensued, and nearby the Spaniards built their camp, a cluster of huts. Though moved about later to various neighboring sites, a town was laid out about 1530. It was named for De Guzman's home town in Spain, Guadalajara, from the Moorish Wad al-hajarah, meaning River of Rocks. From the king of Spain the new town got its coat of arms in 1539; so it was really a white settlement nearly a century before the English landed at Jamestown.

By 1560 Guadalajara had become important. Its chief activity was Indian slave hunting, and the driving of these to work in the gold and silver mines. Vast fortunes were thus amassed, luxurious homes were built; and New Galicia, of which Guadalajara was the capital, then included not only the present state of Jalisco, but much of what is now five or six other Mexican states, reaching up to Sinaloa.

Visit certain old Guadalajara family homes now and you are astonished at the wealth and beauty of heirlooms from colonial days. Hand made silverware, even table services of gold, heavy Spanish chests bound in leather and copper, miniatures, jewelry, crucifixes and old paintings, guitars, inlaid with pearl, historic weapons, hand-carved tables, and other furniture so heavy that it can be moved only with difficulty. The old hand-made locks on front doors are often so massive that the key itself may be as big and heavy as a common hatchet, say a foot long.

Two New Deal Upsets

Round Trips to Europe

Big news from the Supreme Court of the United States and the United State Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia. Two "far-reaching experiments" of the Roosevelt New Deal are declared unconstitutional.

Arthur Brisbane

"The Supreme court in a sweeping decision killed the Guffey coal act; the District of Columbia Court of Appeals held the Resettlement Administration under Professor Tugwell violates the fundamental law of the land."

---

The decisions set forth that "these major experiments in socialization involve unlawful delegation of powers vested in congress and violation by the federal government of the rights of the states," the Washington dispatch avers.

The resettlement decision affected only that part of the relief activities under Professor Tugwell's administration, leaving undecided the remainder of the $4,800,000,000 voted to the President last year.

Much of the resettlement money has been spent and much more allocated, cancellation of which will raise problems.

At Angels Camp, Calif., 25,000 persons watched the annual Calaveras county frog-jumping contest and saw "Can't Take It" cover a distance of 12 feet 3 inches in three hops. Another frog, raised on the ranch of the late Will Rogers, was second, with 12 feet 2 inches.

Twenty-five thousand human beings watched some frogs hop; not half as many would have gathered to hear Einstein lecture on relativity.

It is suggested that every American be compelled to go to school until twenty-two years of age to cut down the competition for jobs.

It might be simpler to keep everybody in school until sixty and then give everybody a pension of $200 a month. What could be simpler than that?

The average sensible American starts making a living long before he is twenty-two and would do well to continue on that basis.

Sir Hubert Wilkins, who has flown in the Arctic, Antarctic and other queer regions by plane, crossed the Atlantic by dirigible recently.

Says Sir Hubert:

"From almost anywhere in the United States, a business man could spend Wednesday and Thursday going about his business, catch the dirigible by airplane Thursday midnight, spend two business days in Europe and be at his desk the early part of the next week."

Prof. Raymond Moley says it was easier for Mussolini to conquer "muddy thinking" in the League of Nations than it will be to "prevail over the mud of Ethiopia in months to come."

---

New York police arrested a middle-aged woman begging near a church and "acting strangely." She wore men's shoes, five dresses, one over the other, and carried bank books showing deposits of $25,000.

This should not discourage wise charity. Not every old woman, begging, has four extra dresses and $25,000. But it might well discourage thoughtless, indiscriminate giving which encourages professional beggary and causes young beggars to graduate as criminals.

Following an old Roman custom, Mussolini is taking a census of the Ethiopians that remain. The total number is between six and fourteen millions. Exact figures are wanted.

The able-bodied will be put to work, plows, spades and shovels supplied by Mussolini, with Italians telling the Ethiopians where and what to dig. That need not horrify us, for it is what we have been doing in this country for a long time. It will be better for the Ethiopians than killing and selling each other into slavery.

Americans ask three questions: "What is the news? Who won the game? Have you heard the story about —?" For that reason, the successful newspaper pays attention first to the news, told accurately and vividly, then it concentrates on sport, then on humor. Such dry things as opinions, editorials, books, in the rear. Fiction ought to be number four, but good fiction is scarce and the other kind not worth printing.

---

Anti-religious hatred persists in Spain. While Pope Pius in Rome was addressing representatives of Catholic newspapers, deploring Communism and the Hitler attitude toward the Catholic church and the Catholic press, a Spanish mob in Valencia was burning two Catholic churches, beautiful monuments of early days. Former indifference to religion has turned to actual hatred in many countries, and in those that were most deeply religious.

And then, after charging the new king to be faithful to God, David died and "slept with his fathers."

The Reign of Solomon

THE reign of Solomon is usually thought of as one of unparalleled magnificence. The Bible makes it clear, however, that there was a seamy side to this magnificence. At the very outset Solomon did away with his eldest brother, Adonijah, who had claimed the throne as his by right of birth. In addition Solomon executed two generals who had supported Adonijah, and banished a third.

Thus he served notice on the kingdom that he intended to rule with an iron hand, and would brook no disaffection. Such an attitude was, of course, far from pleasing to the people. The Hebrews regarded their nation as a democracy, and they felt the king ought to be their servant, not their master.

But they were helpless. Solomon, with the aid of the military organization which his father had established, made himself an absolute autocrat. His ambition seems to have been to reveal himself a man of power, a great oriental emperor whose outward splendor was in a class with that of the despots of Egypt and Babylonia.

But outward splendor is expensive, and therefore Solomon's greatest concern had to be the getting of wealth. Now David had acquired wealth by conquering the peoples around him. He had pillaged the lands of the Philistines and Arameans and the like, and had used the spoils to beautify Jerusalem. But Solomon was not a warrior. Indeed, far from seeking to make further conquests, he even lost part of the territory which his father had secured.

Edom in the south revolted almost as soon as Solomon ascended the throne. An Edomite named Hadad, who had managed to escape when David nearly exterminated the nation, saw his opportunity now that a king of a different temper ruled in Jerusalem. He returned to Edom, called his wild brethren together, and organized a revolt which seems to have been in part successful. And thereupon Moab, taking courage from Edom's action, likewise rebelled.

Next Syria freed itself. A certain sheikh named Rezon, who had also escaped the sword of David, now returned from the desert where he had long been hiding and raised the flag of revolt in Damascus. Solomon was powerless to stop him, and thus was a kingdom founded on the northeastern frontier of Palestine which was destined to plague the Israelites for hundreds of years to come.

Despite these revolts, Solomon still claimed to be suzerain over the whole of the empire his father had conquered. But, of course, he was unable to collect tribute save from the inhabitants of his own small kingdom. And this made the burden on Palestine almost beyond bearing, for Solomon needed a tremendous amount of tribute to carry out his ambitious schemes.

Girls Are Supplanting the Old-Time Mariners

The hand that rocks the cradle guides the ship—1936 version, writes a London United Press correspondent.

Nimble-fingered London girls are playing a part in steering ships and planes of the world through the seas and the skies.

Calculating machines worked by girls have largely supplanted astronomers and mathematicians in making calculations and computations for the "Nautical Almanac."

The almanac, produced by the British admiralty, contains "information regarding places of the sun, moon, planets and stars, and other particulars required in the navigation of ships," and all the world relies on it for navigation on the sea and in the air.

In former years the staff consisted half of astronomers and half of mathematicians. Now it consists of one-third astronomers and the rest calculating-machine girls.

The "phases of the moon" was the work of three girls. In five months they worked out its ascension and declination for every hour of every day up to 1945. This involved 30,000,000 sets of figures.

By the time they had done this the three girls were so expert that it was decided to continue working out the phases of the moon up to the year 2000—to save training other girls to do the work in later years.

The whole cost of thus dealing with the moon up to the end of the century was $7,500. By the old way the cost would have been $30,000 or more, and the task would have taken years instead of months.

SAFEGUARD VESSELS BY NEW SEA RULES

Regulations Impose Changes on Some Craft.

Washington.—Loud speakers for officers on the bridge to broadcast warnings to various parts of a ship are required under new rules now being distributed by the bureau of navigation and steamboat inspection of the United States Department of Commerce. The loud speaker system supplements the alarm bell system in the current program for safety at sea resulting from the ocean disasters of recent years.

From the bridge the captain or officer in charge can broadcast warnings separately to all lifeboat stations, the embarkation deck, the main crew quarters and places where passengers are likely to gather. This device is expected to forestall catastrophes, particularly those involving fire at sea, in which passengers are trapped through failure or inadequacy of the alarm system.

The revisions embodied in the fifty-third supplement of the general rules and regulations include several other drastic measures, and for vessels of certain types require extensive changes. For new construction they apply now, while for vessels already in commission the changes must be made by various dates between next July 1 and 1938.

Alarm Provisions.

The alarm provisions of the new rules, which were revised recently by a nation-wide conference of inspectors, are the most significant. Once there was a free and easy attitude in this matter. In the regulations of 1915, for instance, vessels of more than 100 tons gross carrying passengers were required to have an alarm bell "unless there was a watchman always on duty" or the inspectors decided that such a bill might cause confusion and panic.

Since then there has not been such sensitive concern for the passengers' nerves. The 1935 rule provided that there should be alarm bells in the sleeping accommodations. Now it is ordered that the bells shall be at least seven inches in diameter, and besides of such size "as to provide an alarm throughout the spaces for which they are intended."

The loud-speaker system, when the vessel is under way, must be supplied with power and be ready for immediate use. It must have a call or attention signal, a shrill and distinctive note of about 1,500-cycle frequency. There must be an automatic emergency power supply. Directions are given for protection to the loud-speaker equipment in fire or collision.

Rules Are Strict.

Earlier safety regulations stressed portable fire extinguishers. These devices in recent years have been supplemented by fire detection and sprinkler systems. The amended rules of 1936 are extremely strict as applied to flammable vessels now in commission. By these are meant especially craft which have wooden hulls or upper portions where sleeping quarters for passengers are provided. This broad regulation applies to ocean, coastwise, river and lake vessels.

The rule provides that vessels with neither fire detection nor sprinkling systems be fitted with automatic sprinkler systems in the sleeping quarters of passengers and other places deemed necessary. In exceptional conditions additional watchmen may be substituted for this requirement, provided that enough watchmen are provided to reach every part of the vessel every ten minutes. The watch system must be under close supervision and its records kept for examination by the bureau.

Detroit Will Preserve Home of General Grant

Detroit.—The small frame house, once the residence of Gen. Ulysses S. Grant of Civil war fame, will not be destroyed to make way for expansion of this city. Instead, the home became the property of the Michigan State Fair association and will be preserved in its entirety for historical students.

The house, which now stands on busy Fort street, was presented to the state fair by its owner, the Michigan Mutual Liability company. It will be moved to the fair grounds and made ready for public exhibit.

Old Northwest Courthouse Rebuilt for Preservation

Chehalis, Wash.—The first courthouse in the Pacific Northwest and the second oldest building in Washington, is being rebuilt. It is the old Jackson Prairie courthouse, located 12 miles south of Chehalis. The log building was constructed in 1847 by John R. Jackson, one of the first settlers in the region.

Asks Body Be Left Untouched Ten Days

Pasadena.—The peculiar will of a man who ordered that his body should be left untouched for ten days after his death was revealed in court procedure here.

"I am fearful that I might be buried alive," explained the codicil of the will of Auguste J. Paris, who died recently.

In order that he might administer the will, Pierre Paris, a son, asked the court to invalidate the codicil.

State laws governing the disposal of dead bodies, he explained, prevented him from carrying out his father's wishes.

Lights of New York

by L. L. STEVENSON

Harbor Thrill: A blanket-like fog hanging over the bay . . . A big Staten Island ferry boat, loaded with hundreds on their way from their homes to a busy day in the city, sliding through the thick mists toward its Manhattan slip . . . Directly in its path, a little government cutter . . . Hundreds see what seems to be a great tragedy—a collision between a pigmy and a giant . . . Screams arise . . . Mariners also see the peril. Sirens send forth their blasts . . . Whistles scream . . . But in the ferry pilot house stands a keen-eyed, steel-nerved man of the sea . . . At exactly the right moment, the steering wheel turns . . . The ferry shifts its course—and glides into the slip, leaving the little cutter bobbing in its wake unharmed . . . A few seconds later the passengers are streaming ashore with their minds filled with their tasks, . . . and the ferry and the cutter forgotten.

Give a Man a Horse: Encountered William S. Hart in Times Square. The years have dealt kindly with the two-gun hero of the old days of the silent screen. He looks much like he did when, in the close-ups, he gazed at his audiences with a poker face. He's past sixty now and hasn't acted for years. Near Los Angeles, he has a 200-acre ranch with seven cowboys and 200 horses. Among them is the famous Pinto, now 29 years old. But with all his horses, Bill Hart doesn't ride much these days and when he does he chooses his horse with care. A serious operation two years ago is the cause. And I still thrill when I mentally vision him galloping over the lonely prair-e-e-e-e.

Note of a New Yorker: Please omit further references to the old home town and bucolic scenes. To tell you the truth, I'm city-sick. It's a recurring ailment with most malignant symptoms at this time of the year. Pounding the pavements, hemmed in by Skyscrapers, jostled by chiselers, I long for the great open spaces with such a yearning that I ache. I want to escape but can't. The reason is that I wouldn't be worth anything outside the big town. That's the curse of it. The city gets on your nerves and makes you want to flee after it has so softened you that you can't!—O. L.

Just a bit different: "Back home again. It was lovely in New York. But now my town looks so small and shabby. Queer that I never noticed before how low the buildings are in the business section and that our mayor goes around with his clothes unpressed. How quiet everything is now, and how uninteresting. My friends seem rude, too. Whenever I start to tell them about New York they change the subject to some business women's meeting or a recital by someone from a town a few miles away. Or they tell me that they wouldn't live in New York for anything in the world—that here in this city of 8,000, they get anything New York can give. Maybe they are right but I'd give ten years of my life—and I come from a short-lived family—just to be a resident of your inspiring city."—Claribel K.

City life: Two first floor women tenement dwellers, leaning out of the windows . . . Their stomachs protected by cushions . . . Gossiping with one another . . . The husband of one of their friends had come home lit the night before . . . Tossed all the furniture down three flights of stairs . . . Sent his wife bumping down after it . . . The wife was unhurt . . . The cops toted the furniture back up again . . . and it wasn't damaged much . . . But after the cops had gone, the drunk fell over a chair . . . and gashed his head so badly he was taken to Bellevue . . . That was a shame, one gossiper told the other . . . If he hadn't gone to the hospital, he would have had to go to work with a hang-over!

Movie eavesdropping: "Why do you want to stay for the rest of this picture? All he does is bring us pasteurized milk in the morning. Now a picture about Madam Curie would be something. She discovered radio and radio killed her."

Nice work if you can get it: Debutantes, eager to earn a bit of money, register with an agency which supplies well known names for endorsement purposes. Each is investigated thoroughly and those in whose families there have been scandals are not listed, the theory being that testimonials from those thus smirched wouldn't do a product any good. The girls receive $40 to $50 for a plain endorsement and from $50 to $5,000 for a testimonial with a photo—the rate depending on the standing of the family.

Skeleton Keeps Vigil Over Old Wagon Trail

Pratt, Kan.—Keeping a silent and solitary vigil over the old Cannonball trail used by wagon trains 50 years ago, the skeleton of a soldier was unearthed near here recently. The skeleton was at first thought to be that of an Indian as it had been buried in an upright position, as braves were interred. A crumbling metal badge about two inches in diameter together with patches of uniform cloth, however identified the owner as a soldier.

It is believed tribesmen, in tribute to his bravery, accorded him the burial reserved for braves.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

Say to yourself every morning: "Here is another day. What am I going to do with it?"

Full Speed Ahead

Map out your plan of action before you start. If some job was left unfinished yesterday take it up, and get done with it. Then turn to the next job on hand, and make at least a start on that.

Go into a business establishment or a factory and you will never find anybody wondering what to do next.

In a war the commanders must count on the enemy. And there he finds a problem.

But in peace he may look a good way into the future and be ready to meet it.

Doing a job carefully is not enough. It must be done not only carefully but rapidly.

That factor of time must always be taken into consideration.

In every large and prosperous business speed is mandatory.

But speed does not mean hurry.

It can only be attained through knowledge of the job, and sufficient experience to enable you to get through it without blunders which may send you back to the beginning for a new start.

Those second starts are always expensive.

Make it a rule, when one day's work is done to think about the next day.

It is quite possible that unforeseen contingencies will force you to alter your plans.

But get back to them as soon as possible.

Don't let your wits wander.

Don't try to do one job while you are thinking about another.

Neither will be well done if you do.

The person of average intelligence, willing to work, and with a fair supply of ambition ought to get on in the world, and he will if he keeps his head and his temper, and doesn't look out of the window too much.

In war the leaders must count on what the other fellow may be doing just over the hill.

In peace you are able to make pretty shrewd guesses about what is likely to happen, and be ready for it.

When the day's work is done, think it over and check up.

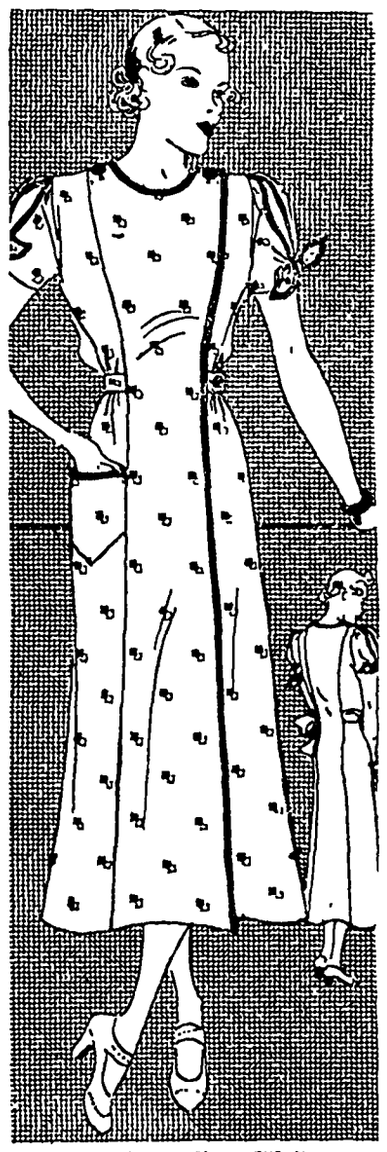
Then turn to something else. You can't get along without some sort of recreation.

Keep away from office politics. Don't try to shoulder the man ahead of you out of the way.

He may be more expert in the shouldering business than you are.

Use your abilities and your endurance to their full capacity, and you will find the going easier and the prospect of success more probable every day that you spend on your job.

Slenderizing Coverall With Many Features



PATTERN NO. 1853-B

You want to indulge in new styles and fancies, of course; but first and foremost as the backbone of any sensibly planned wardrobe comes this utilitarian coverall.

Note especially the sleeve treatment—the wide eyelets and bow knots. Unusual aren't they? And you'll approve the smart adjustable belt which can be tied or buttoned as shown. The front panel buttons at the shoulder and contributes a most appealing feature. Who'd ever guess this model was a smock dress? Surely not the casual observer, who's so taken with the slenderizing lines and neat appearance.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1853-B is available for sizes 32, 34, 36, 38, 40, 42 and 44. Size 34 requires 4⅞ yards of 35 inch fabric. Send 15 cents for the pattern.

French New Deal May Bring Panic

Public Fear Parallels U. S. After Roosevelt Victory in Fall of 1932.

Chicago.—Threatened with the establishment of a radical government—"a sort of New Deal on the American pattern"—France is experiencing a wave of public fear that is described by Howard Wood, prominent economic writer, as similar to the financial panic which swept the United States between the election of the New Deal in November, 1932, and the date of the inauguration in March, 1933.

"In France," Mr. Wood reports, "the 'little fellows' are trying to protect their savings by hoarding. Runs on the banks have reduced deposits. Capital is leaving France as fast as there are ships available to carry gold Disclosure of plans to 'soak the thrifty' and schemes for vast political expenditures have intensified the scramble.

"Similarly in the United States," Mr. Woods adds, "the panic did not begin until the interval between the election of the New Deal and the date of its taking office, and culminated in the nation - wide bank moratorium of March, 1933."

Observers of business and industrial conditions have already established the fact that the low point of the depression was passed during the summer of 1932, and the upward climb to prosperity was already under way in the fall of the year. Fears that arose from the proposals of New Dealers for large public expenditures, their opposition to budget balancing plans and comments favoring inflation stopped recovery and brought on the panic.

Where the Taxes Go

Washington.—Although Adelino, N. M., doesn't rate a United States post office, it did manage to wangle a $6,000 school gymnasium out of the WPA. The treasury will put up $4,438.

SHAKE WELL BEFORE READING

Washington.—Now one of the New Deal's federal bureaus is going to tell you how much gin to put into a martini or how much "sing" goes into a "Singapore Sling." Alcohol Control Administrator W. S. Alexander has called in the nation's outstanding experts on the art of mixing cocktails to determine for him the proper standard of contents for various highballs, fizzes and other mixed drinks. The resulting testimony will be published in a sort of federal "bartender's guide," to sell for five cents.

Maybe the experts will tell the bureaucrats what to do for a headache after November 3.

Canadian Farm Exports to U. S. Rise Sharply

Ottawa, Ont.—As a result of President Roosevelt's trade agreement with Canada, Canadian exports to the United States have shown marked increases during the first four months of 1936, according to the report of the department of trade and commerce. Some of the increases were as high as 300 per cent, heaviest gains being made in agricultural products and lumber.

The number of horses shipped to the United States rose to 8,700, compared with 1,600 during the corresponding period a year ago The export value of swine increased from $3,000 to $390,000 and cattle exports increased $1,400,000. Cheese exported to the United States rose from $21,000 to $407,000 and exports of patent leather increased $37,000

Advances in the export of lumber were marked, soft wood lumber increasing from $1 642,000 to $3,227,000. Hardwood exports showed an increase of almost 100 per cent to $307,000, square shingles increased from $1,189,000 to $1,510,000, wood pulp from $6,724.000 to $7,965,000 and newsprint from $20,315,000 to $23,589,000.

How New Deal Spends.

Washington.—Until 1917, the federal government never spent as much as a billion dollars a year. The Roosevelt administration has spent an average of 7½ billions a year, with no cessation indicated.

Dear Mr. Kerrane:

This will acknowledge the receipt of your letter of April 7th.

Senator Guffey has nothing to do with the filling of positions in the Works Progress Administration in Pennsylvania. This matter is handled entirely by Honorable Edward N. Jones, State Administrator, Works Progress Administration, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania.

I would therefore suggest that you contact your local Democratic leaders with a view to having them recommend your appointment to Mr. Jones who will, I feel sure, give your application and their recommendation every possible consideration.

Sincerely yours,
R H Bailey
Secretary to Senator Guffey

Here is a little advice to an unemployed, disabled veteran who wrote to Sen. Joseph F. Guffey, Democrat, of Pennsylvania, whose "coal industry NRA" bill which bore his name has been declared unconstitutional by the United States Supreme Court. The vet wanted a WPA job. The reply, on stationery of the United States senate and signed by Guffey's secretary, tells the needy veteran to get the blessing of the local Democratic politicians if he wants federal work relief. The barn will have modern conveniences and will be a fine improvement to the Hueneman farm The Northern Lumber Co of Klemme are supplying the material on this job

Henry Katter Building Barn

Henry Katter has torn down some of the old buildings on his farm and in their place will be a fine new barn The block and frame construction seems to be a popular style in the community and Henry will follow that style in his new barn which will be 36x62 feet in size. Building block will be used for the first 8 feet and the balance will be frame construction.

Olson barn equipment will be used for the interior equipment. Material and equipment for the job is supplied by the Northern Lumber Company

Verner Stromer Has New Crib

The combination corn crib and granary being built at the Verner Stromer farm a mile and a half north of Klemme on Highway No. 69 is nearly finished. The new building will be equipped with a Farmers Friend overhead elevator supplied by the Northern Lumber Co The corn crib and granary is a fine addition to the Verner Stromer farm, which is one of the nicest farms in North Iowa.

Is Painting House

Ed Schoenwetter is improving the appearance of his farm by having his house repainted.

New Garage At Parsonage

A garage is being built this week at the Reformed Church parsonage for Rev. Grosshuesch. The old barn which stood across the street from the parsonage was torn down and the lumber from that is being used to build the garage.

House Is Being Painted

Lloyd Lau is having his house east of the park repainted this week.

New Display Sign At Northern

The Northern Lumber Co. have put up a big sign in front of their place of business which is something different than the ordinary sign. The sign itself is about sixteen feet long, and in the center is a display space about four by five feet with an enclosure extending back of the sign about two feet.

This built in place will be used for displaying various types of merchandise sold by the Northern. The sign will be illuminated with electric lights.

FREE MOVIE UNSATISFACTORY WILL CONTACT NEW CONCERN

Show Here Saturday Night Not Up To Standard That Was Expected

The free open air talking picture show given Saturday night in the open air theatre here, was not all that it should have been and future showings by that company were immediately cancelled by Arthur Wellemeyer, who is managing the picture shows for the business men of Klemme.

Will Have New Show

Mr. Wellemeyer is making every effort to get in touch with another concern and will have everything all lined up so that there will be free talking pictures in Klemme this week Saturday night.

The business men of Klemme regret that the show was a "flop," but it was no fault of any of the local business men. The shows were purchased in good faith, and if they were not entirely satisfactory they could be cancelled.

The business men of Klemme want to put on shows that will please everyone and they demand the best in the talking picture line. Come to Klemme Saturday night and bring the family and tell your neighbors.

NEW PHONE DIRECTORIES WERE PRINTED LAST WEEK

The new telephone directories of the Iowa Union Telephone Co, will be distributed and put in the mails this week The printing department of the Klemme Times completed the books and delivered them on Tuesday. The new directories contain quite a list of new subscribers and the advertising section is also larger this year.

INCLUDED WEED CONTROL IN CLASS 1 PAYMENT

Iowa farmers may receive class one payment for controlling noxious weeds under a new provision of the agricultural conservation program. Class 1 payments in Iowa average about $1 50 per acre, varying with productivity of the soil.

The new ruling by the AAA has been approved by the state agricultural conservation committee, according to Ben V Greiman, Hancock county conservation chairman. In his opinion, the payment for week control provided a new incentive and better opportunity for farmers to cope with the growing menace of noxious weeds.

Must Cultivate Clean

Farmers may receive the class 1 payment rate for their farm on any number of crop acres up to 7½ percent of their total soil-depleting base which they cultivate clean or treat with a chorate solution for the eradication of noxious weeds In order to qualify, cultivation must be frequently enough to keep all plant growth down. Farmers intending to take advantage of this new ruling should notify the County committee by June 15.

Payments will be limited to the following perennial noxious weeds: Bindweed, or wild morning glory; leafy spurge; Russian knapweed: Canad thistle; hoary crew or perennial peppergrass; perennial saw thistle; horse nettle; quack grass and silver-leaved poverty weed or white weed

County Committee Must Approve

Whether individual farmers will be eligible for payment for this control for any of the weeds will depend on whether the county committee determines that the weeds exist to such an extent that they are a menace on his farm and whether he received written approval of his eradication practice before the date of first cultivation or treatment.

When performance is checked on his farm later in the year the farmer must be able to show that the method of eradication proved successful during the growing season.

National Topics Interpreted
By WILLIAM BRUCKART
NATIONAL PRESS BLDG. WASHINGTON, D. C.

Washington.—A great many persons were mystified a few weeks ago by the treasury announcement that it had entered into an agreement to buy Chinese silver. On the surface, it appeared to be an action by the American government that was wholly a part of its domestic silver policy—a policy that thus far has resulted in no economic benefits at all but has cost American taxpayers rather dearly. Beneath the surface, however, the Chinese silver purchase agreement is one of the most significant moves yet to be made in our foreign policies. I believe it has potential consequences as great or greater than any foreign relations pronouncement to come from the Washington government since World war controversies were liquidated.

Silver Policy

To understand the importance of the silver purchase agreement with China, one must examine international relationships over a wide scope. They involve, first and most important of all, the steady inroad made by the Japanese into the Chinese political and economic structure. They embrace, as well, relations of Soviet Russia with China and Japan, and the whole Far Eastern situation for that matter, and the continued efforts of the British to obtain for their nationals additional or restored spheres of influence in China.

Lastly, these international relationships involve, indeed, directly affect, the open door policy respecting Chinese trade. The United States has consistently maintained that China must be open to world trade and in this attitude our nation has had support of the British and some other white nations. On the other hand, the Japanese, while adhering to the open door policy on the surface, have consistently attempted to undermine it directly or by use of the military.

Before the World war it used to be said in China that the international competition there took the form of diplomacy operated through banks and railways. Now, we see the additions of currencies and tariffs to the methods used by the diplomats. The United States is using the currency method—a method attempted by the British without success two years ago—and through this influence, this nation is seeking to expand its trade with China. The Japanese are employing the tariffs to protect their own interests in China and to keep the British and the Americans on the outside.

So, for the first time since 1898, the battle among the nations for the rich lure of China trade is on an economic basis of competition and, it must be said, Japan is in the lead. The Japanese are ahead in this economic warfare chiefly because of their proximity to the territory which is so rich in potential trade.

A year or more ago, the British sent Sir Frederick Leith-Ross of the British treasury to Shanghai to aid the Chinese ministry of finance in the establishment of a currency system. It was not announced, of course, but the real purpose of Sir Frederick's visit was to stabilize Chinese money and link it to the British pound sterling. Diplomats watched the maneuver with great interest because it was expected that Japan's control in the North China provinces would be loosened through British currency influence. But it failed to work that way. The North China provinces simply were separated further from China proper and the Japanese tightened their grip.

Japan Will Oppose

Now, the Americans have tried something of the same scheme. They worked it out on the basis of silver purchase from China but they prescribed that as the American treasury buys Chinese silver, the dollars paid therefor will be deposited in a branch of the Bank of China which will be established in New York. It will result in easy transfers of money where American exporters ship to China.

No one can tell what the consequences will be. In the first instance, Japan can be expected to exert every power her nationals have to thwart the effect of the program. In the next instance, the British are not going to be enthusiastic about the arrangements because the competition between British and American traders has been increasingly sharper since the World war.

There is still the further circumstance of Japan's smuggling into China. Having had control of the Chinese tariffs, the wily Japanese proceeded to enforce tariff duties rigidly against everyone except themselves. Stories coming out of North China through diplomatic channels as well as from commercial interests tell of vast smuggling operations by the Japanese. In other words, the Japanese have proceeded to find scores of landing places on Chinese soil where they neglected to place customs houses. The net result is, of course, that the Chinese are being supplied with Japanese goods without the payment of a tariff whereas all other imports from foreign shores must carry the tariff load.

Wily Japanese

It seems, then, that while we cannot know at this time whether the Japanese will attempt further military movements in North China, it certainly can be said unequivocally that the open door for China foreign trade is at stake in this conflict. Most authorities on foreign affairs with whom I have talked tell me that there is little hope to prevent Japanese political supremacy in China. They cannot move northward because in that direction they butt their heads against the Soviet Russian frontier. The Soviet is armed to the teeth on the border of Manchukuo, but to the south and in the area known as North China, no present method appears for curtailing Japanese power.

Thus, history appears to be repeating itself. The battle for concession that took place in 1898 seems about to be revived and undoubtedly the climax to this conflict has been hastened by the American agreement to acquire Chinese silver.

Few authorities are willing to venture a prediction as to where this new policy, promulgated by President Roosevelt, will lead us. Some insist that it is in accordance with the attitude the United States has held for nearly forty years insofar as Chinese relations are concerned. Others claim that, since Japan has grown to such importance as a world power, the silver agreement may eventually lead us further into the Far Eastern controversy, so far, indeed, that the questions later to arise may involve national honor—and national honor ofttimes is a prelude to war.

While we are looking over Japanese activities in the Far East, we ought not to forget that only a year ago, our congress, under a political lash and the pressure of selfish interests, voted the Filipinos their independence. Of course, the Philippine islands are still under our protection and will be so for several years, but it is most interesting to know that already the Japanese have set about the colonization of portions of the Philippine islands.

Japs Invade Philippines

Through the last 20 years, American officials stationed in Manila have kept a watchful eye open to detect any signs of Japanese encroachments. It was not military movements by the Japanese that were feared. It was their well-known capacity for creeping under the edge of the tent and suddenly developing into an economic power.

Official reports now are reaching Washington which indicate amazingly rapid encroachment by the Japanese upon affairs of the islands. One official document shows that Japanese colonists have virtually swallowed up one large Philippine valley. By devious ways, legal and illegal, Japanese farmers have filtered through and have obtained all of the land that is tillable in the Dava valley.

Philippine laws, sponsored by Americans before independence was voted, have been designed to check Japanese colonization and the battle against this has gone on unremittingly since the days of the World war when the Tokyo government first exhibited definite ability to expand its spheres of influence through colonization methods. It should be said, however, that the American officials have been somewhat lax in enforcement of the anti-Japanese laws and the result has been that small colonies of Japanese were planted in various parts of the islands.

Now, it is shown that these colonies have developed into great numerical and economic strength. They seem to have unlimited credit from somewhere for their operations and in the Dava valley, for example, they actually control the price of hemp which is the main agricultural product of that section.

The Japanese are operating in another fashion in the Philippines. It is a well established fact that when legislation is being considered by the Philippine legislative body, it is confronted with a powerful lobby if it is inimical to Japanese interests. Existence of this lobby is known and recognized and many of the Japanese representatives are fearful of consequences to their political careers if they go contrary to the lobby's position.

Such penetration as this into the Philippine economic structure may not be as serious from a world standpoint as the Japanese penetration of North China. Yet, it seems to me that the American government cannot ignore the activity. It may be that Japan has no thought of eventual military and political supremacy over the Filipinos but the surface indications at this time are those that have always preceded political and military subjugation of territories and possessions.

It will be recalled, as well, that just such a condition or circumstance as we now see was among the fears expressed by those representatives and senators in our congress who opposed Philippine independence. The opponents of the independence bill in congress dared not openly assert that Japan would be a menace to the island independence. To have done so would have meant international complications.

Married People Are Healthier and Live Longer, Study Shows

Death Rate Is Highest Among Single Persons

NEW YORK.—If you want to live long and be healthy, get married.

Figures showing that the married state, whether blissful or not, is at least a healthy one are reported in the current issue of the Metropolitan Life Insurance company's Statistical Bulletin.

"Marriage, apparently, is conducive to long life and good health," the report states. "At any rate, married men and women live longer than do single persons, and married people register lower death rates from nearly all the important causes of death than do bachelors or spinsters.

Results of Study.

"We would expect these findings to emerge from any statistical study of mortality according to conjugal condition, for married persons constitute a selected group. 'The lame, the halt, and the blind' do not marry, as a rule. Nevertheless, the differences between the respective death rates of wedded and single persons are so large that this factor of selection can be only a partial explanation of them.

"It would seem that the relatively staid and regular course of married life is more conducive to health than are the comparatively free and easy ways of the unmarried.

Bachelors' Death Rate.

"Among males over fifteen years of age, the standardized death rate for bachelors is 1,218.2 per 100,000 as compared with 855.9 for married men.

"Among females the standardized death rate of spinsters is 1,039.1, as against 856.6 for the married of all ages."

The death rates for influenza, pneumonia, tuberculosis, chronic heart disease, kidney disease, apoplexy, ulcer of the stomach, alcoholism and suicide are appreciably higher among the single than the married, showing that ways of life among the single are not so healthy.

Windshield Filter May Be "Crutch" for Color-Blind Drivers

SEATTLE.—A simple and "infallible" help for the color-blind automobile driver who gets into difficulties because he cannot distinguish between green and red traffic lights is suggested by Thomas Ross of the University of Washington here. In a report to the current issue of Science Mr. Ross describes a contrivance that can be fitted to the windshield of the color-blind driver's car.

The device consists of small pieces of special glass which can filter out either red or green light. With the red filter placed above the green one, the driver will know that when he sees a light through the top piece of glass he is seeing a red light.

When he sees the light through the bottom piece in this arrangement it is a green light. The device is improved by placing a prism over each filter in such a way that the traffic signal will be visible through both filters at the same time.

Device Is Practical.

This idea has worked in actual trials, Mr. Ross reports. It could be adapted to persons suffering from other types of color-blindness besides the red-green kind.

A variation of the red and green filters is also suggested. One of the color filters, says Mr. Ross, might be perforated and parts of the other set in it like polka dots.

"Thus, if the red filter were perforated and the openings were filled with the green material, a red traffic light or other red object viewed through the resulting filter would appear bright with dark spots. A green object, on the other hand, would appear dark with bright spots."

Hairpin Goes Traveling; Reaches Woman's Appendix

FLINT, MICH.—A hairpin here has really carved out a career for itself.

It wandered so far that it probably will be mentioned in the pages of a medical journal one of these days.

Strange to the doctors is how the hairpin happened to end its travels in a woman's appendix.

"That is an amazing thing," said Dr. J. C. MacGregor, who removed the appendix after it had ruptured. He has never seen a report of such a large object getting into an appendix. It is not unusual to find tiny objects of foreign matter in amputated appendices. The woman recovered.

Nordic Type Least Numerous in U. S. Scientist Reveals

Nine Different Kinds of Americans Studied

WHAT is an American?

Not a "pure Nordic," typically, said Prof. E. A. Hooton, of Harvard university, answering his own question before the New Haven meeting of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists. Of three good-sized samples of the American population, taken from diverse social and geographic backgrounds, the pure Nordic type averages out by long odds the least numerous—only 2.25 per cent of the total.

The largest groups, in the nine physical types into which Professor Hooton analyzed the American population, are Nordic mixed with something else—Nordic-Mediterranean and Nordic-Alpine. The first of these two types have long heads and darkish coloration; the second have round heads and medium coloration—never either pure blonds or pure brunettes.

Types Classified.

Other physical types added by the Harvard anthropologist to the Nordic-Alpine-Mediterranean racial triad of popular conversation and writing are the Dinaric, a round-headed, medium-colored, narrow-nosed people, mostly Teutonic in modern distribution, and the East Baltic, also round-headed, but blond and wide-nosed. He also recognized as a definite physical racial type the long-headed, red-haired, blue or gray-eyed Keltics.

Professor Hooton took his population samples in three different ways: from a considerable number of prisons, from "ordinary citizen" groups in Boston and Nashville, and from a group of rather highly educated persons who visited the Century of Progress in Chicago.

No Racial Superiority.

Especially interesting, in his estimation, is the fact that the racial percentage in each group, whether jailbird, man-in-the-street or highbrow, was just about the same as the percentage in the whole population. That is, a really scientific analysis cannot discern any such thing as racial criminality or racial superiority.

This does not mean that there is no correlation between racial type and tendencies in activities, whether criminal or lawful. Thus, criminal Keltics tend to sex offenses and to crimes involving violence, while criminal Nordics are "experts;" specializing in forgery and fraud, but not going in very much for murder.

Device Measures Amount of Glare Eyes Can Endure

WASHINGTON.—How much glare can a person's eyes stand? This is the question that a device described in a patent granted here to two Chicago inventors intends to answer accurately and quickly. The inventors are W. A. Mendelsohn and C. F. Shepard.

Called a glarometer (glare measurer), the device creates glares of various intensities, and on a scale tells just what intensity of glare blinds a person's eyes. The readings obtained, state the inventors, "furnish a means whereby colored glasses of proper color and tint may be readily prescribed to protect the eyes of the patient from injurious effects from sun or other too strong or glaring light."

How It Works.

The glarometer, with its bulb and lens, looks like a lantern for projecting picture slides. In front of the lens slide translucent glass screens of frosted or ground glass. They may be colored or tinted. In the center of each screen is a mark.

By turning a knob the light emanating from the bulb can be made as bright as desired or dimmed. As the knob is turned it moves a pointer across a scale which indirectly indicates the glare of the bulb at any moment.

The person whose eyes are being tested looks at the mark on the screen with one or both eyes. The knob is turned to increase the light until the glare from the bulb is so strong that it temporarily blinds the person and causes him to lose sight of the central mark.

Dog, Research Hero, Honored by Monument

LENINGRAD.—In honor of the dog, so often the hero and invaluable aid of medical research, a bronze monument will be erected on the territory of the All-Union Institute of Experimental Medicine here.

The Monument to the Dog, as it is to be called, will be erected at the suggestion of Academician I. Pavlov, whose famous discoveries in physiology were made by means of studies with dogs.

The monument is to be a bronze image of a sitting dog on a pedestal. Bas-reliefs on all four sides of the pedestal will depict separate moments from the life of the dog at Pavlov's laboratory.

THIS WEEK

The Big "Black Legion"
More and Better Babies
A Worried Empire
U. S. Dollars Emigrate

The "ritual" of the murderous secret society called the "Black Legion" contains some old "Know - Nothing" features. The candidate for admission must be "willing to commit murder, to proceed against Catholics, Jews and Negroes"; he must be "native born, Protestant, white and gentile."

Arthur Brisbane

The "Black Legion," which probably will not last long, had ambitious plans. Among other things it proposed to overthrow the federal government, which is not an original idea. It was also going to set up a dictatorship, with night-riding regiments to enforce discipline. Dictatorship is not a new idea, either.

Strange things are done or planned in the name of "liberty" now, as they were when Madam Roland mounted the guillotine platform.

Russia wants bigger families, like Mussolini and others with "plans." Stalin wants plenty of new little citizens.

A thousand million rubles will be set aside by Moscow to "subsidize large families and aid mothers." Birth control ladies and gentlemen will bear, surprised, that aid to large families will begin after the seventh child. Seven are taken as a matter of course; that is just the beginning of a Russian family.

Chancellor Hitler of Germany joins in the "more and better babies" cry.

The German ideal is no longer the beautiful golden-haired Margaret, spinning her wheel and saying "No." The Nazis demand women who, "above everything else, can become the mothers of several children," and are willing to do so, according to a representative of Chancellor Hitler.

William Philip Simms, English, is afraid the British empire may not survive, on account of "air fleet peril."

Britain is disturbed by the thought that her whole imperial line of communication, stretching 4,000 miles from the Straits of Gibraltar to the Gulf of Aden, is under Mussolini's bombing planes. Except that her empire is the biggest, England should not worry more than other countries. With surface ships losing all importance, except in the opinions of some Americans, anybody's bombers can break up any line of communications temporarily.

"Americans investing huge sums in the Bahamas, to escape income tax," says the New York Times, big type, front page.

Americans have been "investing huge sums" elsewhere, outside of the United States. Billions of American money have gone to Canada, England and other "foreign parts." More will go.

In all the Bahamas, 4,403 square miles of beautiful territory, there is no income tax. Think of that for a happy country.

Needless to say, if enough American money pours in to make it worth while the intelligent British will find a way to tax it.

Germany has proved the "48-hours-from-Europe-to-America" possibility, with America looking on.

Now England is rushing preparations for a line of heavier-than-air planes to fly between England and America, starting in a few months, and the French, preparing a similar line, are negotiating for a half-way harbor at the Azores. The southern route was said to be the wisest by Lindbergh, shortly after his great flight.

Many Frenchmen are disturbed and puzzled by the situation in Europe, and General Mordacq, close associate of Clemenceau in the war, discusses the question, "What would Clemenceau do if he could come back?"

France feels the need of "a man with a fist," un homme a poigne, and Clemenceau was that kind.

Concerning that fine old fighter from the Vendee, it is safe to say that if he came back he would hasten preparations for another war. But he would not have waited until now.

Marshal Badoglio, who cleaned up Ethiopia so swiftly, has been called to Rome, perhaps as part of a wise plan not to let anybody grow too big, like the tree Igdrasil, supposed to have its roots in hell, its topmost branches in heaven.

A new comet now approaching us, discovered by and named for L. C. Peltier, amateur astronomer, who works in a garage, will be the first comet visible to the naked eye since 1927.

Germany cut off the head of a sixty-five-year-old man convicted of killing 12 boys. Before death, "examined" by Nazi officials who thought he might be a Communist, he admitted many other murders. He used a secret poison that doctors could not detect.

OUR SOLDIER IS FRIEND OF PEACE

The American soldier is actually a friend of peace and not an instrument of warfare, and he has no desire for the glory of military combat, although he will not hesitate to defend his country in time of peril, according to Lieutenant Colonel William E. Brougher in an interesting article in the current issue of the National Republic entitled "Our Soldier, Friend of Peace." By way of beginning Colonel Brougher says in part:

"It is just as natural for the soldier to think of himself as a friend of peace as it is for a police officer to think of himself as a friend of law and order. There are those in America today who don't think so well of the soldier. According to current reports published in newspapers and periodicals, there are thousands of people in our country who are taking the pacifist's oath 'never again to support the government in a war under any circumstances.'

By their actions and utterances, these people proclaim the belief that the Army and Navy are performing no useful and necessary service for the nation. They favor disarmament as a means of promoting peace and consider the very existence of the armed forces in America a menace to the future peace and welfare of the country. They are convinced that a man who enters the military or naval service of his country is wasting his life in a worse than useless calling.

It is this belief that forms the basis of the pacifist's opposition to the national defense program. These people are mostly sincere friends of peace. But they are working as hard as they can to defeat the program of another group of friends of peace—the preparedness advocates. Here we have a strange paradox—two groups of friends of peace presenting to the world a spectacle of war between themselves! Getting nowhere fast in the accomplishment of their common object of finding a way to keep America out of war.

It is only natural that the soldier should disagree with those who class him and his comrades as public enemies. But, if he is to take his profession and his religion seriously; if he is to hold on to the faith that sustains him in his service; if he is to be happy in giving the best of hmself and his life to the military service of his country the soldier must have something to say in reply to those who think he is wasting his life. The object of this study is to present the American soldier as a friend of peace; to prove to those who doubt it, the essentiality of the soldier's service to the cause of peace in America.

The pacifist thinks of the soldier as existing only for war. The soldier thinks of himself as existing for peace—either to preserve or restore order. The policeman exists not for crime, but to prevent crime; not to destroy law and order, but to preserve or restore law and order. Because the policeman has to use armed force to oppose crime, this does not make him a party to crime Just so, the soldier has no responsibility for war and in fact has nothing to do with war except as a necessary and very disagreeable means of restoring peace. The soldier fights not that war may be prolonged, but that peace may be restored. A proof of this fact is that an army commander worthy of the name recognizes as his one and only war mission to defeat the foe and end the war. Any army commander who, for any reason whatsoever, prolongs the misery and bloodshed of war one minute beyond the requirements of absolute necessity will find an obscure place in history—and a still lower place in the estimate of military men themselves."

DEMAND HOME MARKETS

At a four-state parley in which farmers from Iowa, Kansas, South Dakota and Nebraska participated recently, a drive was launched to "return the American market to the American farmer." Resolutions were adopted at the meeting, held in Lincoln, Neb., under the auspicese of the Farmers' Independence Council, demanding immediate relief from the great inflow of foreign agricultural products.

The demand was made to effect an equal tariff on all agricultural products and substitutes to the extent that there shall be tariff parity beween raw materials and manufactured goods, the purpose being to equalize, insofar as possible, the exchange value of all goods, commodities and services in the domestic markets of the United States.

The resolutions also favored the development of new industries which, through applied science, will utilize all farm products representing surpluses, or which can be grown on American farms in place of raw materials now imported.

Anothe demand was made that all acts of Congress, the effects of which are to "regiment, coerce or direct the activities of the American farmer" should be repealed.

MACHINES MAKE JOBS

Between 1870 and 1930 the population of the United States increased 218 per cent while the gainfully employed increased 291 per cent. Shortly after the Civil War, before the great strides in industrial advancement had been made, 324 persons were employed in producing the goods and services for each 1,000 inhabitants. By 1930, a higher standard of living, resulting largely from development of machinery, had created so many new demands that 400 persons were at work filling the requirements of each 1,000.

There was a gain of 20,000,000 new jobs during the period of most of the intensive industrial advancement. 1900 to 1930. For each 1,000 of the 47 million population 422 new jobs were created in this period of twentieth century development as industry's contribution to American progress.

NOTICE TO BIDDERS

Sealed proposals will be received by the Town Clerk of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, at his office in said Town until 2 o'clock p. m. on the 19th day of June, 1936, for the following street improvement as per plans and specifications now on file in the office of the Town Clerk, to-wit.

Two strips of seven inch reinforced Portland cement concrete pavement, each 17 feet in width, laid on each side of and joining the 18 feet of paving now laid on Main Street, said extension to begin at the east line of Second Street and extend to the Northwest corner of the Garage Building on South side and to the East drive of the Northern Lumber Company on the North side of the West end of Main Street, also storm sewer; all as shown on the plans and specifications now on file in the office of the Town Clerk The estimated quantities are as follows

7 Square Yards of 7 inch reinforced Portland Cement Concrete pavement,
2 storm water inlets,
125 feet of 15 inch reinforced concrete storm sewer;
250 feet of 10 inch storm sewer
3 manholes;
1800 pounds C I. crossing plates;
300 Square Feet sidewalk replacement;
100 Cubic Yard of extra grading

For details of construction see plans and specifications on file with the Town Clerk Work shall be begun within 15 days after the contract for construction is executed and shall be completed within 45 days after beginning, weather permitting

Payment will be made to the contractor on completion of the work and acceptance of the work by the Town Council, in cash out of the proceeds of the sale of special assessment bonds bearing five percent interest, also out of the proceeds of the sale of bonds payable out of the Town Improvement Fund If the foregoing means of payment are insufficient to pay the total amount due the contractor, the balance shall be paid by the Town out of any funds permitted by law to be used for that purpose.

All bids must be accompanied in a separate envelope by a check on an Iowa bank certified by such bank and payable to the order of the Treasurer of the Town of Klemme, Iowa, at his office in the amount of five percent of the amount bid, as security that the bidder will enter into contract for doing the work and will give bond, in the amount of 100% of the contract price, to be approved by the Town Council of the Town of Klemme, Iowa.

In case the successful bidder shall fail to enter into contract with the Town of Klemme, Iowa, for the construction of said improvement or furnish bond as required by law, within ten days after the award of the contract, the certified check deposited by him with his bid shall be cashed and the proceeds retained by the Town of Klemme, Iowa as agreed and liquidated damages The right is reserved to reject all bids

Copies of the plans and specifications may be seen at the office of the Town Clerk and also at the office of Currie Engineering Company, Engineers, in Webster City, Iowa

A J KUDJE, Town Clerk.

BIG HOLE AT OSAGE ATTRACTS MANY VISITORS

Osage—Imagine Harvey Warrington's surprise to find, when he was plowing with a tractor on the Amelia Stelter land about 3 miles south of town, a huge hole, about 4 feet in diameter at the top but is wider as it goes down. Depth has been estimated at 30 feet. A lighted lantern was lowered on a rope to the bottom of the hole, to determine whether or not the air was gaseous, but remained lit showing that the air was all right. Since the hole was first discovered a week ago there have been many go to see it and each one seems to have a different idea of what caused thehole. The main belief, however is that there is a cave there and somehow or other this opening has been made into it from the top Plans are being made to investigate below the surface.

Glass brick is being largely used in the east for store fronts. It is cast hollow and admits a soft light Hollow glass tile are being used to construct filling stations. They are made in colors and when lighted from within make an artistic display.

At the End of an English Sylvan Path.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

IF ANYONE wants to know the English countryside, let him go house hunting. On such a quest he will discover Nature's cozy-corners that casuals never find. They are everywhere, but as ingeniously concealed as a bird's nest. There may even be a sign which says, "Dangerous narrow road. Enter at our own risk." But that is just the kind of place to insist upon penetrating.

Enter on foot if you are afraid, but the car can squeeze in. You find yourself in one of those incomparable roads like tunnels of living green. Earthen banks of ivy and wild flowers rise ten feet high to be topped by tall trees sprung from the original hedge planted a hundred years ago. The road keeps you guessing by making such curves that there is no penetrating the secret of what lies ahead.

All at once a gate. Within, a bit of woodland, flower-brightened; beyond that, a sunny garden, moldy mossy walls, lattice windows, creepers all abloom and reaching to the roof tiles, which are toned from dull red to gentle green by two centuries of soft rains and sun.

Who would not penetrate the wood to gaze closer—especially when armed with a handful of permits from a real estate firm? You pass through the bit of flowered woodland gay with yellow primrose patches and massed bluebells. But on emerging from the screening trees and seeing the open garden lying in the sun and the house forming a part of it, you gasp and halt.

This is the house of your dreams. A servant appears and explains that the house is to-be-let and is at your service; the lease is for sixty-five years' Exclamation marks rattle about in your head. You stagger away, feeling a kinship with Adam and Eve.

Peculiar Rental Customs.

You select another house which you consider a perfect gem, only to be told that it is not available for "instant possession." The present tenant has the place for four years longer.

These, and other interesting rental customs you may learn in English real-estate offices. Mayfair is full of fascinating real-estate offices, most of them seeming like private homes, with their open fires, Chippendale chairs, and bookcase desks.

"Mr. Upperton and Partners" is the diverting and reticent sign over the door of one of these. Lovely way of expressing it; Upperton, Stoggs, Chair and Jones is outdone by the dignity of "and Partners."

Any of these gentlemen can teach the eager American client new uses of English words and phrases in real-estate jargon, whether or not he offers the ideal ancient house and romantic garden. And it is here that you learn that the rent of unfurnished houses is denoted in pounds sterling, while the furnished house smartly demands guineas—an extra shilling on each pound.

You also learn that company's water "laid on" merely means that domestic water flows from taps instead of being pumped up from well or cistern. Indeed, one must not visibly shudder to learn that for 200 years houses have been occupied by gentry, modern smart people among them, who have had no running water, no lights except kerosene lamps, no telephones. Incredible! Without the tireless English servant, the English gentry must have died out for lack of comforts.

One of the Partners may ask you strange-sounding questions.

"Are you prepared to pay dilapidations?"

That is disconcerting.

"But I don't want a house that is actually in a state of decay."

The Partner patiently explains that any sort of damage or breakage must be restored by the tenant. Your bill for dilapidations may be only four shilling, about one dollar, for a flower holder. But it often happens that one must assume the dilapidations of the previous tenant, which may include repairs and decorations of importance. So it is a word to excite suspicion.

Rent days are not the prosaic first of the month. They come four times a year. Their names are full of suggestion: Lady day, Midsummer, Michaelmas, Christmas. It makes a romantic pleasure of paying rent.

Hunting a Country House.

The hunt for the ideal takes on the aspect of a tour. It is possible to get about by commodious omnibuses. They set you down on the main roads, where local motor cars with drivers can be hired.

Gradually you come to know the districts not too far from London where certain types of the ideal house have sprung from the soil. It is a requisite of the ideal English small house that it should look as if it had pushed itself up from Nature's laboratory of the earth, just as the shrubs, flowers, and trees have done. They are close kin. They all live together in harmony and beauty.

Districts not too far from London contain an entrancing variety of old styles. The house of carved interiors and scrolled gables is a specialty of Kent; the thatched roof hides beside the roads of Hampshire's New Forest; the cottage of light-gray stone makes glad the villages of the Cotswolds; and the Georgian, or rather Eighteenth-century houses, scatter their elegant lines in all parts of the land. Timber and plaster houses tempt one almost everywhere with their Tudor charm.

West of Southampton lies the witching wood of the New Forest, where fine leafage piles delicately up and up against the sky, and where the road slips softly into mossy turf of green, sun-spangled. Out in the sunny tangle of open lands the wild forest ponies roam free amid gorse and broom and heather. Farther along, where the road strikes the edge of the wood, stand ideal cottages with thatched roofs. The windows of the second story are veritable eyes which kindly contemplate. The casement of one is thrown back and the rosy face of a girl laughs with pretty boldness.

This is a country of thatch. More cottages watch by the roadside. Some are inns, but are so elegantly kept that only a lover of the picturesque, a potential artist, would be living there.

You come to one of the richest of all districts for those who hunt the ideal house when you arrive at the hills of the Cotswolds. Gradually its little stone houses catch you in the spell of their beauty. They spread themselves beside the road, taking on almost human qualities. They lift their gables with dignity; they spread their mullioned windows with frankness. Their symmetry seems of the highest art, yet it is said these lovely houses were built by simple artisans. They took the warm, light stone of the land, and even the roof tiles are made of it. All seems a pearly gray, and on this ideal color climb the bright flowers of the garden.

Many Enticing Places.

You linger long and drift from road to lane, from village to farm, drinking in every detail of these houses—the Tudor ornament over the leaded windows, the lovely flat arch of the front door, the beauties of the back of the house, the flowers and a cunning use of shrubs and creepers piling one thrilling beauty upon another against the light gray stone.

In Sussex and Kent, hunt out the old farms and the ancient houses of villages. They have a beauty all their own, with their bricks turned to pink and softened brown. Many have an end gable of stone fashioned in the grand curves which fascinatingly recall the Walloons who brought with them their own traditions of art when driven to England by religious persecutions. Those curvilinear gables have, too, a Spanish flavor, a late Renaissance caper of free-drawn curves. Fascinating interiors those Walloon cloth weavers constructed to make the homes of their exiles resemble those they had left.

Phoenicians Called In

ONE of Solomon's first projects was the building of a series of fortresses to protect the frontiers. But Solomon's far more splendid—and expensive—project was the beautifying of Jerusalem in the center of the land. Here he wanted to erect a magnificent palace and temple to show the world how vast was his power and how deep his devotion to Jehovah. But no Israelite was capable of planning and erecting such structures, for none had seen any great palaces or temples. So Solomon had to call on his neighbors, the Phoenicians, for help.

The Phoenicians had never once tried to invade the Hebrew kingdom, probably because they had never felt the need to spread inland. They had all the seven seas to roam. They were the great traders of the ancient world.

It was natural, therefore, that Solomon should call on these neighbors for help. The Phoenicians knew all about architecture and interior decorating, for they had seen the palaces of all the great potentates of the world. More than that, they could also provide fine building material, for the forests of their Lebanon mountains were thick with tall cedar. And the Phoenicians were delighted to dispose of both their knowledge and timber—for a price. So Solomon struck a bargain with Hiran, who was king of Tyre, one of Phoenicia's chief cities, and forthwith the building operations in Jerusalem began.

The site Solomon chose for his palace and temple was the hill rising to the north of the stronghold now called David's City. Mt. Moriah this hill was named in later years.

Apparently the palace was the more magnificent structure, for it took 13 years to build, whereas the temple required only seven and a half. The sanctuary itself was but a very small building, 60 cubits long and 20 cubits wide—that is, about 90 feet by 30 feet. The royal residence was considerably larger; its assembly hall alone, built of huge cedar logs, was actually 150 feet by 75 feet in size.

Fortunately for Solomon, he was a brilliant organizer, and this alone made it possible for him to draw out of his little kingdom the great wealth he needed. Disregarding the old tribal divisions he substituted 12 federal districts, each with a governor in charge. These governors had to collect the produce for the Phoenician hirelings and also for Solomon and his court. The Bible tells us that each day the provisions for the royal court alone consisted of 330 bushels of fine flour, 660 bushels of meal, 30 oxen, 100 sheep, and an odd assortment of gazelles, roebucks, harts and fat fowl.

So much provender was needed because Solomon had a large family to feed. Not merely was there his standing army, his corps of servants, his counselors and secretaries to care for, but in addition he had his harem of a thousand wives and concubines. This harem, it must be realized, was more for show than comfort, for in those days a king's wealth was measured by the number of his wives. But whatever may have been the reason for the extensive harem, it was an expensive luxury.

And for all this immense entourage Solomon had to provide shelter as well as food. For his wives, some of whom were princesses from neighboring lands, he had to provide palaces, and for his army, which now could boast cavalry and chariots, he had to build garrisons and roads. All this required a vast number of workmen, for there were no steam shovels or derricks to reduce manual labor in those days. Accordingly Solomon had to resort to slavery.

At first he drafted the non-Hebrew inhabitants of Palestine into his labor gangs. He took what Canaanites, Amorites, Jebusites, Gibeonites, and the like were still surviving in the land, and made them state slaves—precisely as his own ancestors had been made state slaves by Pharaoh of Egypt two centuries earlier. But since there were not enough of these non-Hebrews for all the work Solomon planned, he actually drafted Hebrews too. He forced his own people to supply 30,000 men to work as his serfs one month out of every three.

Israel Discovers the World

BUT it was impossible for Solomon to finance all his projects with revenues collected from his own realm, and he was forced after a while to take to trading. Situated as he was between two continents, he could very conveniently go in for commerce. He bought horses from the Egyptians in the South, and sold them to the Hittites in the North. And he levied a high tariff on all merchandise transported through his realm by foreign traders.

Later he extended his activities and, with a fleet of merchant ships built for him by the Phoenicians, sent agents to distant lands to acquire gold and other precious commodities for him.

And thus the Hebrews suddenly discovered the outside world. Until then they had remained an almost primitive folk pasturing their flocks and tending their olive groves amid the remote hills alongside the Jordan. But now they became a cosmopolitan people, and the fame of their great king was spread far and wide. People came from all parts of the world to see the monarch. The queen of Sheba traveled with a train of attendants all the way from southwestern Arabia, about 1,500 miles away, to discover whether Solomon was really as wise as he was reputed to be.

But this sudden plunge into the vortex of civilization had dire consequences for Israel. The foreign princesses whom Solomon took into his harem brought with them their foreign gods and priests; and the Israelites ceased to worship Jehovah with perfect hearts. Moreover, the extravagance of Solomon was a great burden on the people, and some of them began to talk of ending the union of the tribes. Rebellion seethed in the masses, especially in the North, which still was not reconciled to serving a king who belonged to the South. Solomon's last years were not nearly so glorious as the first. He became lax in his religion and powerless among his people. And when at last he died, the whole structure his father had reared, and which he himself had tried to embellish, came tottering to the ground.

Almost immediately after the death of Solomon came a revolution. The new king, Rehoboam, was crowned in Jerusalem and then went to Shechem to receive the approval of the northern tribes. But when the men of these tribes asked if he would reduce the burdens his father had put upon them, Rehoboam, being an arrogant youth of sixteen, replied: "My father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions." So the North rebelled.

The leader of the movement was a certain Jeroboam, who had come back for the purpose from Egypt, whither he had been driven by Solomon. He was the logical choice for king of the seceding region, and at once he was given the crown at Shechem. So now there were again two kingdoms in the land. The northern state took the name of Israel, but it was almost as frequently called Ephraim, after the name of one of its chief tribes; and the southern state was known as Judah.

There were many points of difference between the two kingdoms. As I have already said, Judah and Simeon tended to drift away from the rest of the nation when the Hebrews first invaded the land. And with time that tendency only increased. By the time of Saul the difference between North and South had already reached the point of open hostility, and though David tried to heal the breach he was only temporarily successful. Had Solomon not been so autocratic, the union might have been preserved much longer; but even this is far from certain, for the differences between the two groups had grown to be fundamental.

Judah and Simeon dwelt in a region consisting almost entirely of hills and sand-dunes. Almost all the fertile valley land in the South was occupied by the Philistines. As a result, Judah and Simeon were never able to take to agriculture, and had to remain a pastoral people. The tribes in the North, on the other hand, possessed many broad valleys, and therefore, instead of wandering about with herds, these settled down and took to farming.

But there was another element contributing to make the North richer than the South. The main caravan route from Africa to Asia did not touch the land of Judah. It clung to the coastal plain where the Philistines were settled, and did not enter Hebrew territory save in Israel. Now a highway is of the utmost importance in the development of a region. It means traffic, which in turn brings business, which in turn encourages the growth of cities, which in turn leads to the accumulation of wealth.

But prosperity brings certain evils in its train. It provides an opportunity for the abler—and less scrupulous—men to outwit the rest and get more than their share of the wealth. A few people, the aristocrats, get to have far more than they can use, and the rest, the masses, are left with not even as much as they need. Both classes suffer, for the rich become in time lazy and corrupt, and the poor become spiritless and debased.

Laboratory to Study Soy Bean

Seek New Varieties for Many Industrial Uses.

A co-operative industrial research laboratory has been set up at the University of Illinois to study the soy bean crop. Dr. E. O. May has been named the director. Breeding work is under the direction of W. J. Morse of the bureau of plant industry.

Three immediate objectives of the new laboratory are: Improvement of present industrial uses for soy beans; more facts on the effects of different processes on the quality and quantity of soy bean products; and facilities for testing different varieties as to adaptability for industrial use. On experimental plots nearby, plant breeders hope to grow new varieties even better suited to industrial demands.

Soy bean acreage rose from 2,000,000 acres in 1924 to nearly 5,000,000 last year. Production of the beans themselves increased from 5,000,000 bushels to 40,000,000 bushels. Reasons for this increase—in addition to the demand for beans for food, feed and industrial uses—are immunity of soys to chinch bugs and other pests, good prices compared with other grain crops, drouth resistance and high seed yield.

Soy beans are used in making industrial and food products such as paint, enamel, varnish, glue, printing ink, rubber substitutes, linoleum, insecticides, plastics, glycerin, flour, soy sauce, breakfast food, candies, roasted beans with a nut-like flavor, live stock feeds, and so on. Lecithin is a valuable product of soy bean oil used in the manufacture of candies, chocolate, margarine, medicines, in textile dyeing and as an emulsifier.

A question the new laboratory will study is why the same soy varieties growing under varying soil and climatic conditions show a range of 12 to 26 per cent in oil and 28 to 54 per cent in protein. For paints, varieties having an oil high in "iodine number" are desirable. For food purposes an oil low in "iodine number" is better.

This laboratory is being established under the provisions of the Bankhead-Jones act of June 29, 1935, which provides for establishing by the Department of Agriculture of a limited number of specialized laboratories in the major agricultural regions.

Use Safety Pens for Handling Young Bulls

"Never slaughter a high grade young bull just because he has an ugly disposition. The indiscriminate slaughtering of young bulls is a great hindrance to herd improvement in this state," says John A. Arey, extension dairyman at North Carolina State college.

When a bull has been found to have the ability to transmit good type and high milk producing capacity to his daughters, Arey added, he is a proven asset to the herd. The life of these bulls, which take the guesswork out of breeding, should be prolonged as long as they are active.

A dairy bull can be handled safely, and his period of usefulness extended, by keeping him in a safety bull pen. Such a pen can be built by any dairyman at low cost from materials usually found around a farm, he added.

"A wider use of safety bull pens would not only make possible more rapid progress in herd improvement," Arey declared, "but at the same time would protect the care-takers from ugly bulls. No matter how tame a bull may appear to be, there is no way of telling when he may suddenly turn on his handlers."

Oats as Feed

Oats are not so high in fattening properties as corn. However, oats are very desirable as part of the grain ration, especially for breeding animals and growing young stock, says the Rural New Yorker. On a strictly nutritive basis oats contain an average of about 16 per cent less starch and sugar, or as the chemist calls them, carbohydrates; about 1 per cent less fat, but a little over 2 per cent more crude protein than corn. On the average oats contain about 15 per cent less total digestible nutrients than corn. Corn contains an average of about 1,714 pounds of total digestible nutrients per ton and oats an average of 1,408 pounds.

Cow Always at Work

"Contented cows" are lazy-looking critters. All they have to do, seemingly, is eat, sleep, and chew their cud, yet enviable as their lives may appear to be, they are one of the hardest working animals on the farm. Night and day their bodies are working to produce milk, the secretion of which requires a steady drain of food from the blood stream. If well fed, nutrients are taken from the digestive tract by the blood, but if undernourished the cow produces milk at the expense of her body as a result.

Use of Buckwheat

Very little experimental work has apparently been done on the use of buckwheat for hay. This plant is very high in fiber and unless cut quite green makes very coarse fodder. It has also been claimed that, fed alone, it sometimes causes digestive disturbances and has been known to bring out an itchy rash on the light-colored skin of animals. Buckwheat does its best work as a weed-killing crop or to plow under to add humus. Only small amounts are harvested as grain.

GAS-MAKING STOV COOKS MEAL FOR 2

Amazing New Invention of W. Coleman Brings All the Modern Co veniences of City Cas to Homes B yond the Gas Mains

Economically-minded housewive will share the enthusiasm of W. Coleman, inventive genius, for h new gas-making stove which cooks a meal for 2c or less.

W. C. COLEMAN

The new Coleman Range will do the family cooking at a cost below that of coal, wood or kerosene stoves, and do it quicker and better.

This remarkable new Coleman Safety Range lights instantly just like gas. Makes its own gas from ordinary lead-free gasoline. Its patented, fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners are easily regulated to ex actly the heat desired for frying boiling, baking or broiling

Mr. Coleman uses Everdur Meta for the fuel tank, a big safety tea ture. Everdur metal will not rus or corrode.

In addition to providing every cooking advantage of the finest city gas range, Mr. Coleman's new Range adds beauty in the kitchen by distinctive styling and pleasing color effects in gleaming porcelain enamel finish.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful Coleman Ranges will receive illustrated literature and a valuable Stove Check Chart by addressing a postcard to W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-235, Wichita, Kansas—Adv.

No Need to Suffer "Morning Sickness"

"Morning sickness"—is caused by an acid condition. To avoid it, acid must be offset by alkalis—such as magnesia.

Why Physicians Recommend Milnesia Wafers

These mint-flavored, candy-like wafers are pure milk of magnesia in solid form—the most pleasant way to take it. Each wafer is approximately equal to a full adult dose of liquid milk of magnesia. Chewed thoroughly, then swallowed, they correct acidity in the mouth and throughout the digestive system and insure quick, complete elimination of the waste matters that cause gas, headaches, bloated feelings and a dozen other discomforts.

Milnesia Wafers come in bottles of 20 and 48, at 35c and 60c respectively, and in convenient tins for your handbag containing 12 at 20c. Each wafer is approximately one adult dose of milk of magnesia. All good drug stores sell and recommend them.

"Riding Lesson"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter.

YOU'VE heard stories about how people have learned to swim by getting thrown into the water and having to swim. Well, here's a story of how Duke Edwards learned to ride a horse.

Duke lives in New York city. Maybe you've heard of him. Maybe you've seen him ride horses. He does it pretty regularly now. But I bet you've never seen anything half as good as that first broncoback excursion Duke ever took, out in Kalispell, Mont., in July, 1912.

It was this way. Duke was twenty years old and fed up with the big city. The old adventurer's blood was pumping in his veins and his feet were itching to go places. So he invested most of his money in a railroad ticket and headed west. He didn't know what he was going to do when he got there. But that was soon settled for him.

On the train, Duke met up with a bird in a big, 10-gallon hat. He got talking with him, and told him he was going west to see if he could get a job on a ranch.

"Can you ride a horse?" the big fellow wanted to know.

Riding a Horse Wasn't One of Duke's Accomplishments.

Well, Duke couldn't ride a horse any more than he could walk a tight rope, but he wasn't going to let that stand in his way of getting a job. "Sure I can," he said. And right there, his troubles started.

The big fellow told Duke he was a rodeo rider. He'd just finished up working for a wild west show and was on his way to join another one in California. He told Duke he'd fix him up with a cowboy outfit and see if he couldn't work him into a job somewhere. That was more than Duke had figured on.

I mean, he might have bluffed his way through the business of riding a the horse, but getting aboard one of those bucking broncos they ride in the rena was another thing altogether. The more he heard about that job, the less he liked it. But before he'd finally made up his mind, the big fellow had talked him to a lot of cowboy clothes, and Duke owed him so much money that he just had to have a job to pay it back.

The Reward for Bluffing Is Usually a Show-Down.

Duke began hoping they'd turn him down when he applied for a job—but they didn't. The big fellow saw to that. He went to work at seventy-five bucks a month and his keep, and since it was the off season and the show was in winter quarters, he managed to bluff his way through the first couple of weeks on the job. Duke's method was simple, but it had its kickback. He just bragged much about what a good broncho buster he was that everybody took it for granted that he knew his horses. But all that talk was just going to make things worse for him when the big showdown came.

Duke fooled the rest of the show, but he couldn't kid the big fellow. When he found out Duke couldn't ride a horse, he started teaching him as much as he could. But you can't teach a man to bust bronchos in two weeks, and that's about all the time they had before the show went on the road again.

Duke had a streak of luck the first week or two the show was on the road. They forgot about him or something. Anyway, nobody asked him to ride a horse. Then, in Kalispell, Mont., the blow fell. And a tough blow it was, too.

"Dynamite" Was a Tough Specimen of Horse Flesh.

Kalispell was a great ranching town. A cowman in the neighborhood brought in a bad horse that went by the pretty name of Dynamite, and Dynamite's reputation was so bad around that neck of the woods that the show offered a prize of a hundred bucks to the first cowboy that stayed on his back. And the first name drawn to ride Dynamite was—you guessed it—Duke Edwards.

"I didn't say anything," says Duke, "but I felt myself going into a faint. By this time I knew how to mount a horse and ride it around the lot, but I'd never been on a bucker. It took six cowboys to saddle that brute and hold him so I could mount, but I had to act as if I wasn't afraid. I climbed into the saddle, and then, with a yell, we were off.

"The horse, rearing and snorting, went down almost to his knees and bounced up again. I thought my head would snap off my neck. I felt myself slipping, but I stuck to the horse until we reached the bandstand."

Duke Played a Solo on the Big Bass Drum.

It took Duke and Dynamite just about forty seconds to reach that bandstand, but remember, that's quite a while to be on a bucking horse. It was at the bandstand that it happened. There, Dynamite put on an extra pound or two of reserve steam. He gave a last leap, kicked up his heels, and Duke went flying over his head.

Straight into the bandstand Duke flew. He could see the big bass drum coming up at him—felt his nose flatten out as it hit the drumhead. Then everything went black until he awoke in the hospital with a busted head and a big cut in his forehead.

And did they fire Duke after that? Well—that's the funny part of it. Everybody said he'd given that Dynamite horse one heck of a good ride. Duke stayed with that outfit for three years and rode plenty more tough horses. Then he went into the movies and rode in western pictures, so you've probably seen Duke at one time or another, on the screen. And that one experience, he says, has given him the only rule of success he knows. "First throw your bluff," says Duke, "and then make it good."

Famous Maps of Path to Young Woman's Heart

As one journeys along the Rhone in France from Avignon, it becomes an easy matter to explain the famous maps of the "Path to a Young Woman's Heart," which the Courts of Love, held here in Seventeenth century, delighted in making.

Tarascon, down the river from Avignon, takes in good part the sly fun poked at the character of the city's inhabitants in the tale, "Tartarin of Tarascon." The people of the town themselves go so far as to sell pictures of Tartarin on his expedition in the Alps, and some will even point out to gullible travelers the place where he lived.

Arles, also in this vicinity, is famed for its Roman antiquities. Its amphitheater is about 500 yards in circumference, has 43 tiers of seats and holds about 26,000 spectators. In the summer months it is the scene of many bull-fights. The old theater of Arles was also built by the Romans, although it was designed by a Greek architect.

Where the Rhone divides before entering the Mediterranean, it forms a salt delta, the Camargue, which is one of the most romantic regions of Provence. Flamingoes with pink feathers inhabit its marshes, herds of cattle roam its fields, and steer-roping and branding are a part of everyday life. The cowboys of the region are expert, and their small white horses are very intelligent, taking as lively an interest in the games of their riders as the men do.

Tradition says that here the three Maries, Mary of Bethany, Mary, the mother of James, and Mary Magdalen, with their servant, Sarah, landed when they sailed away from the Holy Land after the Crucifixion. Sarah, an Egyptian, has become the saint of the gypsies, and in May they congregate here in colorful throngs to worship in the Church of the Saintes Maries de la Mer.

Ship 6,000 Pounds Of Wool

Garner:—Some 6,000 pounds of wool grown in Hancock county was pooled and shipped by truck to Des Moines to the state wool growers association. Twenty cents a pound was paid owners at the time of shipping. More is assured later. H. V. Caldwell is president and W W. Clement is secretary of the Hancock county organization.

"MORE ABUNDANT LIFE"

"Under massive, gilded chandeliers in the paneled ballroom of the former Edward B. McLean home a staff of news writers now on the employment rolls of the Works Progress administration is completing a 250,000-word guide to the city of Washington," says a United Press dispatch from Washington.

"Officials of the project, known as the writers' project, said the guide would be in final form within a month. But exactly what use would be made of it NO ONE connected with the project could say. No provision has been made to publish it and no funds are available for that purpose."

Farmers Can't Get Help; WPA Jobs Lure Hands

Springfield, Ill.—From all over Illinois directors of the Illinois Agricultural association are receiving complaints that farmers cannot obtain sufficient help this spring because the men they customarily hire now work for the WPA and prefer the easy work and good pay to the more rigorous tasks of farming.

Farmers in past years have been able to get skilled help for $25 or $30 a month and keep, according to the association. "This year farm hands in many cases refuse to take jobs on the farm and frankly say that they would rather work for the WPA three or four days a week," says an IAA statement. "They say that while the farm wages with board give them more money than the $54 a month WPA wage, they prefer to work less and take less pay."

A survey by a Rockford newspaper showed a need for 1,000 farm hands in Winnebago, Boone and Ogle counties. L. W. Braham, Will county farm adviser, reported many appeals from farmers for help.

"The farmers resent the idea that they are unable to get help when there are so many men on relief," said Braham. "These farmers say the relief situation has reached the point where they must compete with the federal government."

Similar complaints were heard in Kankakee, Cook, De Kalb, Du Page, La Salle, Vermillion, Champaign, Edgar and Douglas counties. Of recent weeks shortage of help has been reported in Minnesota, Wisconsin, Michigan, Kansas and other states, because hands preferred to work for the federal government and let the taxpayer foot the bills.

Prairie States Boil Over Farley's Slur

Washington—Rumblings of indignation against Postmaster-General James A Farley's slur against the prairie states in a speech made at Grand Rapids, Mich., came to a head in an outburst on the floor of the house of representatives by Dewey Short of Missouri. Farley had predicted that the Republican nominee in the coming election would be the governor of "a typical prairie state" whose experience as such scarcely fitted him for the White House.

"I was amazed to read that statement," declared Short. "It is absolutely inexcusable in any member of the cabinet and chairman of his party. I want it understood that I am not advocating the candidacy of any person. There are many fit candidates in the Republican party But I resent the slur and slander by the postmaster general passed not only upon the citizens of Kansas, but upon the citizens of Missouri, Illinois, Indiana and all the other great prairie states."

You, Too, Are an Employer

Washington—There are now more than 3,000,000 public employees—one worker out of every ten in the nation—directly on the payroll of every man, woman and child in America "whether or not he or she owns property or pays income tax, or pays or does not pay direct taxes at all," says the National Civil Service Reform league. The salaries of these federal, state and local employees exceed 4 billion dollars a year, the league estimates.

National Debt Skyrockets.

Washington.—The United States national debt, it is estimated, will be more than 34½ billions by June 20. More than 13½ billions will have been added since President Roosevelt was inaugurated March 4, 1933.

Wheat Imports Mount

Winnipeg, Man.—Up to May 8, the quantity of Canadian wheat imported into the United States since the beginning of the crop year was 28,442,000 bushels, compared with 12,775,000 bushels in the corresponding period of 1935.

Who Makes A Garden

By Douglas Mallock

Whoever makes a garden has never worked alone;
The rain has always found it, the sun has always known,
The wind has blown across it and helped to scatter seeds—
Whoever makes a garden has all the help he needs.

Whoever makes a garden should surely not complain,
With someone like the sunshine and someone like the rain,
And someone like the breezes to aid him in his toil,
And someone like the Father, who gave the garden-soil

Whoever makes a garden has, oh, so many friends,
The glory of the morning the dew, the daylight ends
For wind and rain and sunshine and dew and fertile sod
And he who makes a garden work hand in hand with God

Two Funerals Were Conducted At Reformed Church Past Week

MRS. STRAATMAN PASSED AWAY SATURDAY MORNING

Was Resident Of This Community For Nearly Half Century

Funeral services for Mrs Mary Straatman, who passed away Saturday morning, June 13, at the home of her daughter, Mrs George Neimeyer at Garner, were held at the Klemme Reformed Church on Monday afternoon, with the Rev Calvin Grosshuesch and the Rev Wm Hueneman in charge Pall bearers were J E Stille, Ben Katter Henry Thieman Wes Haefner, Art Upmeyer and Fred Barz.

Obituary

Maria Straatman, nee Meyer, widow of the sainted Elder Wm Straatman, was born September 13th, 1850, at Luebeke, Mein Germany She was baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran Church of Luebeke At the age of 25 years she and her sister (Mrs Kuck of New Knoxville Ohio) came to America The two sisters found a home at an aunt's place in New Knoxville Here she was united in marriage to Mr Wm Straatman and the first years of their married life the couple spent on a farm in that community.

In the year 1893 they moved to a farm in Liberty township, Hancock County, Iowa One son and five daughters were born in this home Three of the children the only son, and two daughters died in infancy

Mr and Mrs. Straatman were charter members of the Klemme Reformed congregation They were faithful members throughout their lives

They were regular in their attendance and were much concerned about the religious training of the children Mr Straatman served his congregation as Elder for two terms.

In the year 1912 they moved to Klemme Mr Straatman died April 4th 1927 For some time Mrs Straatman remained alone in her Klemme home, and then made her home with her daughters. Mrs Reinhold Lemke and Mrs. George Niemeyer Mrs Straatman suffered the ailments of old age since last fall During the last 4 weeks her condition became serious, and in answer to her prayer God called her from this earthly life. She died in the home of her daughter Mrs George Niemeyer of Garner at 3 30 o'clock Saturday morning, June 13, at the age of 85 years and 9 months.

All who knew Mrs. Straatman speak of her as a kind-hearted mother, always busy at work in her home, generous to all who needed help

Surviving and mourning her death are her children, Mrs. Geo. Neimeyer of Garner, Mrs Reinhold Lemke of Liberty township, Mrs. Harvey Wilkins, St. Mary's Ohio, a sister, Mrs. Kuck, New Knoxville, Ohio; eight grandchildren and two great grandchildren.

FINAL RITES CONDUCTED AT KLEMME REFORMED CHURCH

Had Suffered From Illness For More Than A Year

Funeral services for Mrs. Alfred Josten, who passed away at her home north of Klemme Tuesday evening, June 9th, were held at the Klemme Reformed Church on Friday afternoon with the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch and the Rev. Wm. Hueneman in charge. Pallbearers were Clark Lackore, Harold Radloff, Einer Christensen, Ed Jacobs, John Humphrey and Oscar Greiman

Obituary

Agnes Josten, nee Back, daughter of Peter and Anna Back, was born at Blairstown, Iowa, April 9th 1895. She was baptized and confirmed in the Lutheran church of Blairstown of which her parents are members. Her childhood days were spent in the home of her parents She was joined in marriage to Mr. Alfred Josten of Klemme, Dec 3rd, 1919 The young couple settled on a farm 2 miles east and three miles north of Klemme One son, Duane, was born to this couple

Mrs Josten was in poor health since March 1935 As soon as her ailment seemed serious she visited the hospital at Iowa City for an examination In the course of her sickness she was taken to Rochester once and to the Iowa City hospital six times But in spite of all medical care her condition gradually became worse and her suffering increased until God in his compassion called her from this life. She fell asleep quietly Tuesday evening June 9th at 11:45 o'clock, at the age of 41 years and 2 months.

The parents of Mrs. Josten were married 50 years ago, January 1st. This is the first occasion where they mourn the death of a child.

Mrs Josten loved her home She delighted in making it a real home for her husband and son, and a place where the friends of the family felt the spirit of friendliness and hospitality. She was well known and had many friends in the community, where she was ever ready to help where help was needed. Her favorite scripture passage, which proved a source of strength and comfort to her during her trying days, was Psalm 23.

Surviving and mourning her death are her husband, Mr. Alfred Josten and son, Duane,; her parents Mr. and Mrs. Peter Back of Blairstown; her brothers and sisters: Mrs. M. Peterson, Garner; Christian Back, Garner; Herman A. Back, Garner; Nelse J. Back, Klemme; Wm. Back, Blairstown; Mrs. Dora Mecklenburg, Belle Plaine, Iowa.

R. N. A. Convention Was Big Success

DISTRICT R. N. A. CONVENTION ATTENDED BY LARGE CROWD

Storm Prevented Drill Teams Demonstration In Park

The local R. N. A. lodge entertained a District Convention here Tuesday and many ladies prominent in lodge work from all over the state were in attendance

Stores were decorated for the occasion and the streets were decorated with lodge colors and the main street lined with flags, while Welcome signs were in evidence.

It had been planned to have part of the drill work put on in the park, but rain ruined this plan and all work was put on in the school house

The local ladies were highly complimented for the excellent manner in which they entertained the visiting ladies. Garner will entertain the convention in 1937

The Royal Neighbors wish to thank the merchants for cooperating and decorating their windows the school board for the use of the school house, Mr. Wellemeyer for his welcoming address; Rev. Grosshuesch for the invocation and anyone in the commnity who helped make their local convention a success.

Phyllis Christiance Had Birthday Dinner Sunday

Phyllis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. L. Christiance, was seven years old Tuesday, but as it was more convenient for her company she had a fine birthday dinner Sunday to which she invited her Grandpa and Grandma Christiance of Thornton; and Mr. and Mrs. Vaughn Staebler and son of Clear Lake.

ENTIRE NEW OUTFIT WILL BE USED FOR SHOWS IN KLEMME

Sound And Pictures Guaranteed To Be The Very Best

Art Wellemeyer, who has charge of the free movies for the business men of Klemme, has contracted with Mr Rasmussen of Kensett, to show talking pictures in Klemme for the balance of the season. Mr Rasmussen showed pictures a couple of times last fall and they were very satisfactory

In order to handle the Klemme shows, Mr. Rassmussen has purchased another new machine outfit, and the equipment he is bringing to Klemme is entirely new, according to Mr Wellemeyer.

The first feature picture for the summer entertainment will be shown here Saturday night and the title of the picture is "Danger Ahead," a Peter B Kyne story Besides the feature there will be the regular run of comedy and shorts

The show, which was to have been given last Saturday night, had to be cancelled as it was impossible for Mr. Wellemeyer to book a show for that night, and Mr Rasmussen was unable to handle an extra program at that time Talking picture shows are now assured for the balance of the season in Klemme's open air theatre.

FATHER OF KLEMME SCHOOL MAN BURIED AT GREENE

Funeral services for Jacob Kingery, 74, who died Friday night at his home in Greene, were held on Sunday afternoon at the Church of the Brethren with the Rev C. E Schrock, pastor of the church officiating

Mr Kingery was the father of Mr. Albert Kingery, Klemme High School teacher and athletic director

Mr Kingery, a life long resident of Greene, was active in church work throughout his life, and for sometime was active in the civic life of Greene Mr. and Mrs. Kingery celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in March of 1934

Besides his wife he is survived by four sons, Albert of Klemme, Delmer of Allison, Frank and Lewis of Greene, and five daughters, Mrs. E E. Broadwater of Preston, Minn; Mrs. Dick Ray, Mrs. R. F. Hardy, Mrs. V. L. Hardy and Mrs. R. R. Swab all of Greene, 19 grandchildren, 3 great grandchildren, two brothers, Amos and Ben, both of Greene.

The grandest show of them all, "SHOW BOAT" coming to the Avery for four gala days, Sunday, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, June 21, 22, 23 and 24, starring Irene Dunne, Allan Jones, Charles Winninger, Helen Morgan & Paul Robeson, will have you humming the glorious songs for days. "Show Boat" with the memorable romance and drama of Edna Ferbers novel —with the lingering melody and rhythm of Jerome Kern's music—with its soul stirring story—you will want to see it again and again. Words alone cannot describe this new and greatest screen masterpiece. The old lovable songs have been retained in the picture. "Old Man River," "Bill," 'Old Fashioned Wife," "Make Believe," "Cotton Blossom," 'Can't Help Lovin' That Man" besides other new songs that have been added. As a book it was great, as a motion picture its glorious. Please do not miss seeing "Show Boat." Remember the dates.

THIS IS GOOD-BY

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

THIS is good-by, and for a long, long while,
Not for an hour, not only for a day.
Yet I can laugh, and even you can smile,
Though you were always wiser, in a way.
And so farewell, and here's the casual kiss
Men give so often, even women do;
Yet something ever after we shall miss,
Miss till such things as hours and days are through.

This is good-by, and for a long, long time,
Not for a week, not for a month, or year.
Not soon my eager feet the stair shall climb,
Though you may wait, may wait In vain to hear.
Or I may come, may come and may not find,
Yet with a smile we wave, a smile we go.
At ev'ry parting heaven is always kind;
This is good-by—thank God we do not know.

Four Trips to Europe Weekly Are Scheduled.

London.—Transatlantic air mail service will be in operation within two years on a basis of four round trips a week, according to Sir Francis Shelmardine, director general of British Civil Aviation.

Sir Francis declares British authorities have developed three types of airplanes they believe capable of operating the services.

Recent negotiations between representatives of the British government, the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada, and representatives of the United States, resulted in understandings being reached which it was hoped would bring about a transatlantic air service connecting these countries.

Full reciprocity between the countries concerned was agreed upon. Operation would be undertaken jointly by a British commonwealth operating organization and an American operating cor pany.

Consider South Route.

Although it was recognized that the northern route via the Irish Free State, Newfoundland and Canada was shorter than the southern route, and would therefore have the advantage of more economical operation, this fact did not preclude the possibility of use being made of the southern route.

Thus will be forged the last main link in the chain of British empire air communications.

In view of the fact that on either route a stretch of approximately 2,000 miles is involved, it would at present be impossible to provide the capacity required for the whole of the mail. Little practical knowledge was available of flying conditions on these routes. Climatic conditions present a number of difficulties yet to be surmounted and the first services would be of an experimental nature.

New Planes Ordered.

Two highspeed land planes, capable of operating the service during the summer under all conditions and possibly even during the winter, have been ordered.

In addition, the air ministry has given financial assistance to Imperial Airways for the development of the Mayo composite aircraft. This is a combination of two aircraft and involves development of a new technique which would shorten the take-off normally required for heavily-loaded aircraft, and might enable a greater payload to be carried out at a lower power output than now possible.

COIN ON FOREHEAD

THIIS is one of those puzzling little stunts that appear to be really magical when presented in off-hand fashion.

Borrowing a small coin, the magician sets it against the center of his forehead. The coin apparently becomes magnetized, for it adheres there.

Even though the performer tilts his head forward and shakes it from side to side, the coin does not fall. The magician finally removes the coin and gives it back to its owner.

It all depends upon the way you put the coin in place. Set it against your forehead and push the coin upward. This creates suction and the coin will stick firmly after you take your hand from it.

Bedtime Story for Children

BILLY MINK WARNS BOBBY COON

FOR a long time Billy Mink and Bobby Coon sat gossiping on the edge of the Laughing Brook. Then Bobby, having finished what he had to eat, decided that he would go down the Laughing Brook to see what he could find. There's nothing Bobby Coon enjoys more than wandering along the Laughing Brook, watching for a little fish to carelessly come within reach, or just simply playing in the water. Bobby has almost as much curiosity as has Peter Rabbit He simply has to examine everything which appears strange. A shiny pebble in the water or a shell will catch his eyes and he will stop to play with it.

Billy Mink watched Bobby start along down the Laughing Brook. "I wonder what he'll do when he comes to that little fence." thought Billy. So, to find out what Bobby would do, he followed him. When Bobby came to the little fence he sat down and stared at it in the funniest way. Then he began to talk to himself. "That's a funny thing," said he. "I wonder how that little fence happens to be here. I've never seen it before. I wonder what it's for. Nobody had any business to build a fence like that. The only way I can get around it is to climb way up that bank, and I don't want to do that." You know Bobby is rather lazy.

So, he sat and looked at the fence, which was made of sticks stuck down in the ground, and the more he looked the more determined he became that he wouldn't be stopped and that he wouldn't climb that bank. Of course it didn't take him long to discover that right in the middle of that fence was an opening, a sort of gateway. But it was a very narrow opening. You see, it had been made just wide enough for Billy Mink, and Bobby Coon is a great deal bigger than Billy Mink.

Bobby went a little nearer and once more sat down, his head cocked on one side as he studied that little opening. "It's too narrow for me, but if I try hard enough perhaps I can push those sticks aside and make it wider. That would be easier than climbing that steep bank," he said.

So Bobby walked a few steps nearer and again sat down. Somehow, he had an uncomfortable feeling that something was wrong. He didn't know why he had that feeling, but he had it. Now, whenever one of the little people of the Green Forest has that feeling he becomes very cautious. Bobby was tempted to try at once to push his way through that little opening, but because of that feeling that something was wrong he hesitated. Then very carefully he examined that little fence from the bottom of the steep bank clear to the edge of the water. He smelled of each separate stick of that fence, but he could smell nothing suspicious. Those were just plain old sticks and nothing else. Finally, he made up his mind that there couldn't be anything really wrong in at least trying to go through that little opening. He reached forward with one foot to place it right in the middle of that opening.

"Stop!" cried Billy Mink.

Child Portrait Thought to Be Work of Da Vinci

Lyons.—A portrait of a red-haired child recently discovered in a private collection here is believed to be a painting by Leonardo da Vinci. There is no signature on the painting, which obviously dates back to the Fifteenth or Sixteenth century, but it is known that the great Italian painter used to mark his paintings by tucking his initials away in some obscure portion of the canvas.

To prove the authenticity of the painting it will be subjected to various experiments in microphotography. Dr. J. Locard, head of the laboratory of the Lyons police department, which is equipped to make microphotographs, has been engaged in this sort of detective work in regard to crime and counterfeiting.

This time, however, he will use his apparatus to detect the presence of the two microscopic letters L. V. which will give practical proof that Da Vinci was the original artist.

Beauty in Sixth Place in Coeds Life Rating

Ames, Iowa.—Love and health are more important influences in the lives of Iowa State college coeds than is beauty.

That was disclosed in a survey of the valuations placed on a list of 12 factors in the lives of students in Iowa State college home management classes.

Beauty, which was rated as of prime importance by women interviewed recently by a women's magazine, was placed in sixth place by the coeds.

The women whose answers were compiled by the women's magazine rated beauty first and love and affection second. The coeds rated love and affection first; health second. Both groups placed economic security in third place.

Youth was named by women as the fourth most important factor in their lives, while coeds placed it in ninth position. Religion was given twelfth place by both groups.

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SOME TIMELY HINTS

WE ARE beginning to realize that "just a cold" is not always a simple thing. Many of the fatal illnesses are begun by a cold that has not been cared for intelligently or has been ignored.

During the spring when unseasonable weather or warm days cause carelessness, colds are most prevalent. A cold may, even after what seems a good recovery, leave the body weakened and thus open to serious complications and after effects. Staying in bed is one of the best remedies, drinking plenty of water and using citrus fruits freely. Nothing has yet been found that is better than the old remedy of hot lemonade, good warm cover, plenty of fresh air and a comfortable bed.

The following are a few recipes for various lemonades:

Hot Lemonade.

Take three tablespoons of lemon juice, three-fourths of a cupful of boiling water and honey to sweeten. This makes, with cold water and ice, the standard plain lemonade. This serves one; adding various spices and flavors gives a different lemonade.

One may slice the lemon, cover with boiling water, let stand ten minutes well covered, strain and serve sweetened to taste. This gives the flavor of the peel which is well liked.

Spiced Hot Lemonade.

Cut a lemon in two and cut a slice from each half. Extract the juice from the halves. Pour boiling water over the lemon slices, using one cup, add one-eighth teaspoon of ground cloves, one teaspoon of minced crystallized ginger and two cherries cut into halves. Add honey or sugar to sweeten.

Hot Grape Ade.

Combine the juice of one lemon with two tablespoons of grape juice, one cup of boiling water and sugar to taste.

Menus should be planned to keep the body in good health, full of pep and energy Now with the markets full of the fresh fruits and vegetables they should be used very freely to avoid illnesses.

...Early in 1866 commissioners were ...t to Fort Laramie to make an... ...er treaty with the Sioux and ...eyennes but, without waiting to ... the outcome of these negotia..., the government decided to build a chain of military posts to protect travelers over the Bozeman Trail. Accordingly Colonel Carrington, then stationed with his regiment at Fort Kearney in Nebraska, was ordered to establish, organize and take command of the new Mountain District of the Department of the Platte.

At that time the district had but one post in it—Fort Reno, 160 miles north of Fort Laramie. Carrington was directed to move this post 40 miles westward, garrison it and then with the remainder of his command establish three other posts—one on the Bozeman Trail between the Big Horn mountains and the Powder river, one on the Big Horn river and the third on the Yellowstone river.

So that is why we find the Second Battalion of the Eighteenth marching north from Fort Laramie this hot summer day 70 years ago. From the clear Wyoming sky the hot sun blazes down upon them mercilessly and as they plod along the dusty trail they look longingly upon the cool promise of snow-capped Cloud Peak in the distance. Of the 700, only about 200 are veterans. The rest are raw recruits from the East—scarcely the best soldier material to be pitted against such redoubtable warriors as the Sioux and Cheyennes.

Luckily they cannot look into the future and see what is in store for all of them in this strange land of Absaraka—the loneliness, the numbing cold of a Wyoming winter, the hunger and the other privations, and for some of them—a horrible death under the stabbing lances or smashing war-clubs of the Sioux.

Perhaps some foreboding of their fate has already come to them—at that council at Fort Laramie when Red Cloud, springing into the center of the council ring and pointing his finger at Colonel Carrington, exclaimed: "You are the White Eagle who has come to steal the road! The Great White Father sends us presents and wants us to sell him the road, but the white chief comes with soldiers to steal it before the Indians say yes or no! I will talk with you no more! I will go now, and I will fight you! As long as I live I will fight for the last hunting grounds of my people!"

So he stalked out of the council and prepared for war, as did Man Afraid of His Horses, hereditary chief of the Oglalas, Crazy Horse and American Horse of the same tribe, and Black Shield of the Miniconjous

Of course, some of the officers are scornful of their foes. A few months later one of them will be saying boastfully "Give me eighty men and I will ride through the Sioux nation!" Within a week he will go out from a fort with 81 men and not one will return alive! But the terror of that day is still six months away. Now the only concern of their commander is to reach his objective and begin the work he has been commissioned to do.

On June 28 the expedition reached Fort Reno. Carrington decided that it was not practicable to move the fort as he had been instructed to do. Instead he ordered the stockade repaired, left 200 men to garrison the post and pushed on toward the north. On July 13 he established his camp on the banks of the Big Piney creek, and two days later began building the ill-fated post to which was given the name of Fort Phil Kearney.

Within a week Red Cloud struck his first blow against the invaders—stampeding a herd of horses grazing near the fort and killing two soldiers and wounding three others in the party sent in pursuit of the raiders. From that time on until its abandonment in 1868, Fort Phil Kearney was virtually in a state of siege.

Scarcely a month passed without an average of 15 to 20 separate and distinct attacks upon parties of woodchoppers, herders or scouting details and in most of these one or two men were killed and a greater number wounded. Not a wagon train could pass along the Bozeman Trail without being attacked.

One day a messenger dashed into the fort with the news that one such train, en route from Fort Laramie, was corralled by the Sioux and in imminent danger of being wiped out. Carrington immediately sent an entire company of the Eighteenth to the relief of the beleaguered train. When it arrived at the fort it brought mail from the federal commissioners at Fort Laramie assuring the commander that "a satisfactory treaty of peace with all the Indians of the Northwest" had been signed!

During the next three months Carrington sent repeated requests to his department commander for reinforcements but it was in vain. Not until November did any arrive and then it was only one troop of the Second cavalry, 60 strong. In December about 90 recruits joined the battalion in the Mountain District and these had to be divided between Fort Reno, Fort Phil Kearney and Fort C. F. Smith, which had been established on the banks of the Big Horn in Montana. Requisitions for ammunition were not answered and the allowances of the three garrisons were reduced to a point which made rifle practice for the recruits impossible.

In fact, the stupidity of the higher officials in handling the situation which faced Carrington and his command is almost unbelievable. "At Fort Laramie, when all was peace, there were twelve companies of regular troops, while at Fort Phil Kearney, where all was war, only four companies were allowed." Thus reported General Sanborn after a tragedy had shocked the whole country into realizing how ironical was President Andrew Johnson's congratulatory message to congress on December 8 that "treaties have been made at Fort Laramie and all is peace in the Northwest"!

Less than two weeks later, on December 21, the Indians attacked the wood train engaged in logging operations on Piney Island, a few miles from the fort and Carrington detailed Capt. J. W. Powell with a force of 80 men to go to its relief. Two days before Powell had been called upon for a similar duty and had performed it efficiently. But just as the detachment was about to start out, Capt. W. J. Fetterman begged for the command of the expedition, pleading his senior captaincy as justification for the request. It was Fetterman who had made the boast about riding through the whole Sioux nation with 80 men. Carrington, knowing his tendency to rashness, gave him specific orders to "relieve the wood train, drive back the Indians, but on no account to pursue the Indians beyond Lodge Trail Ridge" and repeated those orders from the walls of the stockade as Fetterman's party marched out.

The result is familiar history. Fetterman disobeyed his orders and was lured into an ambush. Today a tall monument of cobblestones stands on an eminence known as "Massacre Hill" on the road between Buffalo and Sheridan, Wyo. It bears a bronze shield with this inscription:

"On this field on the 21st day of December, 1866, three commissioned officers and seventy-six privates of the Eighteenth United States Infantry and of the Second United States Cavalry, under the command of Capt. Brevet, Lieut.-Col. Wm. J. Fetterman, were killed by an overwhelming force of Sioux under command of Red Cloud. There were no survivors."

This tablet makes no mention of two civilians who accompanied the expedition, bringing the casualty list of the so-called "Fetterman Massacre" up to 81. It also errs in crediting Red Cloud with being commander of the Indians. Investigations among the Sioux by Stanley Vestal, biographer of Sitting Bull and his nephew, White Bull, who took part in the Fetterman fight, have proved that Red Cloud had no part in this battle. Instead, the ambush was planned and the Indian warriors were led by Crazy Horse of the Oglalas and Black Shield of the Miniconjous.

Similarly, Mr. Vestal's researches have resulted in the truth about another famous battle in the record of the Eighteenth. This was the Wagon Box Fight near Fort Phil Kearney on August 2, 1867, when Capt. J. W. Powell, Lieut. J. C. Jenness and a force of 30 men beat off an attack by an overwhelming number of Sioux and Cheyennes.

Wildly exaggerated stories have been told of this fight—how Red Cloud directed the attack of his 3,000 warriors against the little detachment of soldiers, crouched behind the flimsy protection of wagon boxes set in the form of an oval corral on the open plain, and how the hot fire of the soldiers with their new breech-loading rifles and plentiful supply of ammunition (7,000 rounds, in fact) exacted a fearful toll from their attackers. Powell himself estimated the loss of the Indians as at least 60 killed and an unknown number wounded. But imaginative historians have boosted that figure to 1,500 killed and wounded!

The truth is that Red Cloud, although present at the fight, took no active part in it. The 1,000 Indians who made the attack were led by Crazy Horse of the Oglalas, Flying By and High Hump of the Miniconjous, Thunder Hawk of the Sans Arcs and Ice of the Cheyennes. Six Indians were killed and six wounded. The soldiers also suffered a loss of six killed, but the wonder is that not all of them were slaughtered, outnumbered as they were more than 30 to 1.

During the next three years of the Eighteenth's service on the plains it took part in many other skirmishes with the Indians. From 1870 to 1879 it was stationed in different places in the South. Then followed another period of service in the Northwest until the outbreak of the Spanish-American war when it was one of the first regiments to reach Manila in the Philippines. It played a prominent part during the entire Philippine insurrection and did not return to the United States until 1901. Twice later it returned to the islands in the Pacific. In fact, seven of the eleven years between 1898 and 1909 were spent in service outside the continental United States.

During the World war the Eighteenth was the first unit of the A. E. F. to plant its colors on the French front; it was the first to capture a German prisoner, the first to inflict a casualty on the enemy and the first to suffer casualties at the hands of the enemy. The records of the War department show that the Eighteenth suffered the greatest loss in killed and wounded of any regiment in the American army during its service overseas. But, distinguished as is this more recent service, in the regular army this regiment is known best for its tragic history 70 years ago when it fought the Sioux and Cheyennes in Absaraka, the "Home of the Crows."

For Her Graduation, Party and Prom

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FRESH and young and unspoiled, the sweet girl graduate is the star of her commencement week and must be costumed daintily and lovely as can be for her part. She must also plan for the commencement parties. Being wise, as her diploma declares her to be, she will choose a graduation frock that will be appropriate for evening wear right through the summer.

Some of the most entrancing dual-purpose frocks are of Swiss organdie. Romantic, youthful and flattering, these sterling exquisitely sheer cottons come in endless variety. Embroidered organdies are immensely popular this year. They are patterned in versatile fashion, ranging from flowing vine and floral motifs to demure bow-knot, also novelty dot effects. Eyelet and all-over cutout embroidered patterns are delicately lacy and have an added crispness that is refreshing and cool for summer wear. Flecked Swiss organdies are fascinating, too, with chenille-like dots and geometric patterns applied in colors or white on solid grounds.

The new cire finished organdies are as sweet and dainty as the edelweiss flowers of their native land. These are so supple in finish they drape beautifully and have a soft but noticeable luster that is inherent in the material and comes back faithfully after each tubbing and pressing.

Miraculous, indeed, are the new crinkled and matelasse organdies that need only to be tubbed and then put on a hanger to dry to return to their original freshness. In solid color or in multi-color floral prints.

Graduating frocks, this year, are full length, with smoothly fitting skirt flaring from the knee. Because of the youth of their wearers and because the style interest is centered on the unusual fabric patterns, the frocks are always simple in line. Distinctive details are chic fly-away sleeves, always perky and crisp in organdie, a restrained use of demure ruffles, and as a rule, modest high necks.

The lovely models pictured have flaring skirts that will lilt blithely to the platform at the graduation exercises and appear later on at informal dances and dinners throughout the summer. Slim sheathes of taffeta make a sleek foundation with an elegant whisper of silk. Taffeta is also being used in a revival of the traditional sash with butterfly bow and long ends as instanced in the youthful frock of eyelet embroidered Swiss organdie to the right in the trio.

Just as the tradition of white for brides is no longer uniformly observed, pastel colors or touches of color on white have become as correct for graduation as all-white. Wherefore, the flower-like maiden pictured to the left will go tripping demurely up the aisle in a sprig-embroidered organdie. The brief bolero jacket has fly-away, pleated shoulder-widening sleeves to enhance its chic and its charm.

Of course you have fallen in love at first sight with the beguiling dress, centered in the picture. Everybody does. A discreet and artful use of ruffles adds to the quaint but very modish air of this summery frock which is fashioned of pin-dotted Swiss organdie. The red grosgrain ribbon tie at the throat and a red grosgrain belt match the color of the fabric dots. You'll see wee crystal buttons all the way down the front, if you look closely, and how smartly bouffant are her sleeves!

IT'S THE LATEST

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Here is a coat and dress that is a last-minute arrival, so new that it's newness almost startles. It has that modish broad shoulder line which is essential if you would be up and going in fashion. Great emphasis is given to color alliance in this model by Creed. The dress has a front of green, brown and red madras. The three-quarter length coat is made of beige and brown wool as is also the dress. The coat fastens with a wide chamois gray belt. The hat is gray felt.

Cocoon Handbags

Thanks go to the butterflies whose small cocoons are now being used as handbag material. The cocoon is dried and pieced together, the whole giving the appearance of grayish-brown tree bark with a rough woody texture.

STRIKING BUTTONS ADD BRIGHT TOUCH

Many striking ideas are being developed in the button line. For sport blouses, a clever manufacturer uses numbers to replace ordinary buttons down the front. These, ranging from one to nine, are of plastic material, sometimes in bright color to form a contrasting effect against the blouse fabric or else in imitation ivory, tortoise shell or delicate, pale amber.

The signs of the Zodiac also have been a source of inspiration for button designers and have been used with great originality by leading dressmakers for summer afternoon or beach dresses. The Chinese inspiration has been responsible for one style showing Chinese script engraved over mother-of-pearl discs or plastic plaquettes in lacquer red.

Dull Fabrics Choice for Deshabilles and Lingerie

Lingerie and deshabilles are more popular than ever in dull fabrics, such as mossy crepes and delicate rayon sheers. Favorite colors are periwinkle and turquoise blue, pale pink and salmon. Tones of maize, champagne and canary yellow are seen also as well as delicate tones of mauve, which are especially requested by discriminating women to wear with dresses in the new shades of purple, Bishop or Parma violet.

Small Watches Attached to Suit Lapel Is Latest

The new small watches, in a colored leather backing and suspended on a colored leather fob, are worn attached to the lapels of suits. The same watches, but on a larger and simpler scale, are being worn in the lapels of men's business suits. The only catch to these new watches is that it is more difficult for the wearer to tell the time than for the rest of the world who happens to pass by.

Buying Violet

Before buying any of the pleasant violet shades that are so popular test them in the light of day. They look vastly different, you'll find, from their indoor color.

TRICKS IN RICE COOKING

Many a June Bride loses all her sentiment for rice when she changes from ivory satin to kitchen print Cooking rice in water sounds so simple There are, however, only a few tricks, say extension specialists, between a gray, gummy mass and white, fluffy, tender rice that comes out in separate kernels

To begin with, proportion does make a difference For every cup of rice, 2 quarts boiling water seasoned with 2 teaspoons salt should be used This produces about 3½ cups boiled rice

Wash the rice grains in hot water, drain and pour gradually into rapidly boiling salt water Then reduce the heat and boil gently in an uncovered kettle Rapid boiling breaks up the kernels and cooking below boiling makes the kernels sticky

When the grains are tender clear through, place the rice in a colander and pour hot water through it to remove and separate the grains Cover the colander with a cloth and set over hot water on the back of the stove or in a warm oven for a few mintues This steaming swells the kernel, making them extra light and fluffy.

TO OUR SUBSCRIBERS

We want to say "Thanks" for the liberal way in which you are responding to the statements we mailed out on June 1st. Many mailed us checks, while others called at the office to pay their subscription to the Klemme Times. We want to thank you for your prompt response. Watch for your date after your name at the top of this page. We have not had time to change all of the dates, so if your date is not changed this week, it will be by next week.—The Editor.

Secrets of AAA Come to Light

Wallace, Under Pressure, Reveals Big Gifts to Farmers.

Enthusiasm over the new AAA has been somewhat dampened by disclosures about the old AAA that was knocked out by the Supreme Court. When the Administration hastily threw together a new farm bill Congress asked a few general questions about whether it would stand the test of constitutionality and then swallowed it whole. Without public hearings of the chiefs of the Agricultural Department and with no debate on specific details of the plan, Congress later turned over $470,000,000 to Secretary Wallace. It was a blank check rushed through so that "benefit" payments to farmers might be flowing generously just before election time next November.

One of the witnesses before the subcommittee of the House Appropriations Committee on March 10 was Chester C. Davis, administrator of the old AAA. At this closed House hearing Administrator Davis was asked if he could supply a list of farm owners who had received more than $10,000 under the old AAA. Mr. Davis said it would be a "colossal clerical job." In answer to questions he said he "would be very much surprised" if payments to single individuals or properties ever ran as high as $200,000.

Facts Are Demanded.

After the new AAA was launched and thousands of employees were at work preparing to start the gentle, election time, rain of checks, Senator Vandenberg of Michigan offered a resolution in the senate demanding information on payments to farmers of $10,000 or more. Immediately Senator Joseph T. Robinson hastened to the rescue of the New Deal and its politically important record of gifts to farmers. He used parliamentary tricks to delay any probe. Secretary Wallace, of the Agricultural Department, was inclined to be humorous about it. He told the press that if the amounts paid were made public it might tempt evil persons to kidnap the farmers' daughters.

The demand for facts, however, and the reluctance of the New Deal to supply them, attracted so much attention over the country that Secretary Wallace was forced to reveal some of the items on the public records of disbursement of public funds. Following are some of the facts admitted by the Secretary.

Some Huge Awards.

One large cotton plantation operator received $123,747 in one year, for not growing cotton.

The world's largest hog-farming company received $157,000 in a year. This was the company's reward for feeding its hogs with garbage instead of corn.

Sugar benefits of $1,067,665 went to a Florida company, $961,064 to a Puerto Rican producer and $1,022,037 to a Hawaiian concern. The payments were benefits for not growing sugar cane.

A Florida concern received $41,194 for not raising tobacco.

A California concern received $63,768 for not growing rice.

Peanut growers did not fare so well. The largest payment for not growing peanuts was $3,000.

One of the items on the Secretary's list was a payment of more than $50,000 to Thomas D. Campbell, "wheat king." Mr. Campbell and his associates have raised wheat and flax on their own properties for years and they also have rented extensive acreage. He has rented land from the Indians in the west at bargain rates, ranging from 50 cents to $1 50 an acre. On this Indian land Mr. Campbell was paid about $7 an acre for not growing wheat.

In view of the importance of this belated information on AAA some Senators and Representatives point to the wisdom of thoroughly airing WPA before more billions are thrown into that program.

Little Jobs First

President Roosevelt, in his Baltimore speech, talked about the ambition of the Federal government to "control the forces of modern society." It would be a tremendous job and probably would have to be done in such a hurry that the Civil Service laws would be set aside in the interest of haste. Applicants for jobs in this new stunt then would not necessarily have to know anything at all about society, ancient or modern. Indorsement of the district boss back home would turn the trick. A Control of the Forces of Modern Society Project should be a gorgeous thing, in spite of doubts as to its constitutionality, however, reasonble. It could be called CFMS (Cuffems for short) Apostles of entrenched greed and benighted followers of the old order already have begun to sneer at it. One old man, apparently not holding fast to his dreams, wrote to an Indiana newspaper asking why it wouldn't be a good thing to put the whole thing off until we established a little control over the national budget.

How to Succeed.

A New Jersey editor remarks that an Administration which is so deep in the red that it cannot see over its debts and deficits is in no position to tell a farmer how to run his farm, or to advise a factory-owner on how to make the plant pay.

EYES OF THE WORLD

REPORTER-PHOTOGRAPHERS, hundreds of them, constantly scour the world for "shots" that will make a news highlight more real . . . more interesting . . . more understandable. The single, business-like click of a camera and a thousand-word story is captured, all in an instant, to be presented in a manner more graphic than the words themselves could ever attain.

The scenes these men photograph number into the thousands daily. From this great number a careful selection is made. The chosen pictures, designed to aid you in the visualization of important news events or "human-interest" occurrences and individuals, are regularly offered by this newspaper.

This is our answer to a modern public's demand upon a modern newspaper for pictures of places, persons and incidents of world-wide interest.

Baking powder biscuits and cookies rise better and brown more evenly on baking sheets than they do in pans. When pans with sides are used the sides prevent an even heat and the bottom of the cookie or biscuit becomes to brown before the top is browned.

Flowers for the house should be cut in the late afternoon. Select those blooms which are just in the opening bud stage, and then plunge them into water up to the necks overnight. Failure to realize that cut flowers need much fresh water is often responsible for poor keeping qualities.

Atom Gun Realizes Alchemist's Dream

Gold Made From Another Metal, Scientists Claim.

Washington.—An atom gun shooting atomic projectiles at speeds of 15,000 miles per second, with energies of 11,000,000 volts—more than double the power of any atom smashing device yet created by man, and capable of transmuting every element existing in nature—was announced here before the annual meeting of the National Academy of Sciences by Prof. Ernest O. Lawrence and Dr J. M. Cork, of the University of California.

With this new atomic "Big Bertha," Doctor Lawrence and his co-workers say they have succeeded at last in realizing, on a small scale, the alchemist's dream of creating gold out of another metal. The quantities made, however, Doctor Lawrence remarked, are not of a magnitude to affect the treasury.

The feat was achieved by the bombardment of platinum with water, or rather with the hearts of double-weight hydrogen atoms taken from heavy water, known as deuterons.

New Substances Created.

The California alchemists converted the platinum not only into gold, but created out of it other substances that do not even exist in nature. These include a radioactive form of platinum known as radio-platinum, and radio-irridium, which also is a radio-active element new in nature.

The new atom gun can shoot a stream of deuteron bullets for the first time out into the open air, without the need of any vacuum tube. This stream of atomic bullets, which casts an eerie greenish-blue glow of preternatural aspect, is the most concentrated and most powerful beam of radiation so far produced by science. Placing one's finger in its path for an instant would cause its loss, Doctor Lawrence said, and great precaution must be taken not to come too close to it.

The beam in air has the relatively enormous length of 25 centimeters, about ten inches; the most powerful high voltage X-ray machines have not created a beam even one-fifth of this giant beam's energy even in a vacuum Professor Lawrence expects to enclose the giant in a vacuum tube jacket, where its power is expected to be much greater.

More Powerful Than Radium.

The 11,000,000 volt bullets, however, were created by Doctor Lawrence not out of heavy water atoms, but out of the hearts of atoms of helium gas, known as alpha particles, which weigh twice as much as the hearts of the heavy water atoms.

The alpha particles, which consist of two protons (cores of ordinary hydrogen atoms) and two neutrons (electrically neutral particles) are naturally emitted by radium, but the energy of the natural particles does not exceed 8,000,000 volts and cannot be controlled in a beam.

Doctor Lawrence's artificially produced alpha particles thus are about one-third more powerful than the neutral radium particles, with the additional advantage that they can be made to go wherever wanted to do man's bidding.

FRIENDSHIP

By

LEONARD A. BARRETT

In his seeming unreality of the spiritual life, Henry Churchill King writes, "Every friendship worthy of the name must build upon mutual self-revelation and answering trust, mutual self-giving, and some deep community of interests." True. Could he have written it better? In other words, true friendship must be built upon a spiritual basis. There is no other basis upon which it can endure. An agreement entered into for mutual profit or personal aggrandizement is not friendship. Many so-called friendships go to pieces at this point, because selfishness rules. In real friendship self-expression and self-giving displace selfishness. Self-revelation triumphs over self-exaltation.

In real spiritual friendship one is always humble for the reason that reverence for personality is a motivating spirit. What is it that we love in a friend? Surely not the physical. We may admire a lovely face but we do not necessarily love it. The physical body is only a composition of chemical elements, very cheap in value. Through it, however, personality is manifested. What we love are its attributes which may be expressed in one word—goodness. We can never see what we love. Only through its expressions does the mystery of friendship speak to us. It should be impossible to hurt or in any way injure a friend. Reverence for personality positively forbids it. One degrades friendship when he demands. "The door must be opened from within; it must not be forced from without."

The blessings of friendship are too numerous to mention. Its constructive and inspirational power is tremendous. In the presence of a real friendship we do our best work and think our most pungent thoughts.

Many a life has been saved because at its crisis, a friend was discovered Many a contribution to literature has been inspired by a friend Friendship fires the imagination, kindles thought, energizes the will, creates ambition, and enobles one's interpretation of the fundamental life values. Perhaps the greatest value in friendship is that we become like those whom we habitually admire.

Emerson said, "The only way to have a friend is to be one." If you have been fortunate enough to discover a friend, guard that friend as a priceless possession. You cannot find friendship. It must find you. "The difficulty is not so great to die for a friend as to find a friend worth dying for" Doubtless one of the finest friendships in history is that of David and Jonathan, of which we read, "The soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved David as his own soul."

Lydia Le Baron Walker

A CHILD is reputed to be the most defenseless of all animals. Its one and only weapon is its cry. It begins to use this weapon almost from its entry into the world. It cries to let the nurse know it is awake. It cries to let its mother know it is hungry. These are expected cries.

The cry becomes a weapon when it rings out with terror. This may be for fear of perfectly harmless things, and can be assuaged. I remember once, when my children were very small, that two little friends were playing with them on the veranda. A gentle summer shower came up. With the first few drops of rain, the older playmate took the hand of her small sister, and said:

"Come along, Doris, you know you always cry when it rains," and away went the two little folk, hand in hand, across the adjoining lawns to their home.

It was such a strange thing for a child to fear. But I discovered that they were afraid of other elements, and of cats, dogs, and other animals, and it was because the mother, herself was timid. She seemed never to attempt to down her apprehensions, nor to ward off the fears of her little children although, of course, she tried to shelter them. Tears flowed frequently and easily with them, but we, and the other neighbors, realizing there was nothing really for them to fear, ceased to worry over their distress.

Rescue.

In districts of congestion, chiefly in slums and crowded dwellings, the terrified cries of children have frequently been the direct cause of their relief. When these shrieks are heard repeatedly coming from the same quarters, there is reason to look into the cause.

A certain amount of crying of infants is their rightful privilege. But it is important to teach that tears cannot change decisions, nor make mother do what the little one wants As the little folk grow, they develop other methods of protection than crying.

The normal child does not want to be stamped a cry baby and soon learns tears are unwarranted except under great stress.

Moderation.

Moderation is a word that seems to be entirely lacking in some persons' vocabularies. Hurry, rush, and similar words, crowd out the first idea. These people dash into enterprises, club work, friendships and all undertakings with such fervid zest that they use up their energy, until it is devitalized, and burn up their interest until it vanishes like smoke. They are continually starting new ventures, following new friendship trails and seeking new ways of being entertained.

Such avid pursuit of the special form of work or pleasure that is on the horizon at the moment, cannot fail to become exhausting, not alone of one's powers of labor in its behalf, but of one's interest in the special subject. A wornout interest like a wornout garment is discarded. Frequently it is with regret that one looks back on the fine things that have been dashed through because of too forced pressure of attention for too short a period.

Lasting Enjoyment.

The person who goes into either work or pleasure with zest, but not too eager haste to get everything out of it immediately, will find a more enduring interest in the occupation or a more lasting enjoyment in friendships, club activities, etc.

Everyone who has ridden a horse, played tennis, exercised in a gymnasium, or done calisthenics at home, knows that moderation must be used, or one will get lame, sore, and disqualified for a while. The moderate continuance of the sport or activity is necessary to get in good form.

So it is with the main things of life. Steady effort brings marked gain. It is built up by sustained pursuit of whatever one wants to accomplish. Success is made by successive steps up the rungs of its ladder. Friendships increase by added links in the chain. Moderation is the keystone, the magic idea back of the word.

AWAII EAGER TO BECOME 49th STATE

ority of Island People Favor Statehood; Hawaii Contributes Liberally to Support of Federal Government, Yet Congress Withholds Favorable Action.

By WRIGHT A. PATTERSON

AP is a loyal American citizen who lives in Honolulu. He went to American schools. He talks, thinks and acts American. But there is one American privilege he does not have, and he wants it—he wants to vote for a president of the United States. is Yap's reason for wanting Hawaii admitted as the forty-ninth ernon C. Yap was born in the islands of Chinese parentage His and mother were small farmers on the island of Molokai. He Chinese wife and one son. His home is a small and unpreten- cottage, but typically American in furnishings and cleanliness. s typical of a very large percentage of the second and third gen- of the orientals in the islands, whom want to vote for a presi- the United States.

Polynesian, Hawaiian and Scotch Irish. He served as mayor of Honolulu for nine years and is an ardent advocate of statehood as a matter of justice for the island people, believing they can better regulate their internal affairs than congress can do the job for them.

The professor, who rates as probably the top in higher mathematics at the University of Hawaii, is a Chinese woman. Teachers of all races are to be found in all of the school grades.

Japs Maintain Schools.

The one possible fly-in-the-ointment is the Japanese language schools They are maintained by the elder Japs, those born in Japan To these schools go the Japanese children before or after regular school hours. Here Japanese teachers teach the Japanese language. Japanese history and Japanese customs and culture.

The attendance at these schools is diminishing rather rapidly with the diminishing population of alien Japanese. In 1920 the total population of Jap aliens was 56,273. By 1930 the figure had dropped to 47,781, a decrease of nearly 1,000 a year, and the annual decrease grows larger each year. Without the influence of the elder Japs the language schools could not continue.

There has been no Japanese immigration since 1900 and it will be but a few years when all the Japanese born will have passed away and with them will pass the Japanese language schools.

The business of Hawaii is agriculture, confined to three commercial crops so far as exports are concerned. They are sugar, pineapples and coffee. For local consumption there are truck gardening, dairying and live stock raising.

Sugar and pineapples demand large scale operations. They are produced on big plantations of many thousands of acres on each of which you find villages peopled by plantation employees, good schools, churches, a hospital, recreation and playground centers, plantation stores, and always the big sugar mill.

Steady Work for All.

In the fields you find Japanese and Filipino workers. Whites and native Hawaiians work in the sugar fields. Chinese serve as clerks in offices.

Help on the plantations is well paid. The work of cultivating, cutting and loading sugar cane is done largely on a piece basis by the Japanese and Filipinos and their average earnings run around $90 a month, to which is added free house rent in comfortable homes, free fuel, cut to stove lengths for cooking, free medical, hospital and nursing services. The lowest flat wage paid to anyone is $1 a day, to which is added the free rent and all the free services.

There is no such thing as seasonal labor Every employee is encouraged to work six days of each week and 52 weeks each year if he will. In fact, a bonus of 10 per cent is paid to those who work as many as 23 days in a month.

Workers in the sugar mills, most of them white or native Hawaiians, average better than $100 per month, and they too receive free rent and other free services, excepting only those who get $150 a month or more, who are charged a small hosmtal fee only.

The islands have a total population of some 384,000 people. Of that number in 1930, 61,445 were foreign born aliens. The population is larger than that found in ten of the present 48 states of the Union.

The islands pay more taxes into the federal treasury than 16 states and they pay their own governmental expense, except for the salaries of the governor and the members of the legislature.

Hawaiian Status Unique.

In Hawaii you never hear a reference to "the states" or to "the United States." To the people there it is "the mainland" and "the islands." The people insist on their place as a part of the United States. They resent being considered a foreign country, and especially resent such a reference when made in the halls of congress by congressmen, as has happened on several occasions.

The people insist the islands are not a stepchild as was the case with the Philippines and is the case with Puerto Rico. The islands are not a possession of the United States, but have a territorial status and as such are just as much a part of the United States as is any state.

They are not a conquered people. They sought annexation and did so at a time, in 1898, when the islands represented tremendous value as a naval base. The people tell you they could have been admitted as a state instead of a territory at that time, but the leaders of that time did not believe conditions then existing made statehood desirable.

Conditions, they say, have radically changed in 40 years and today they are asking that the status of the islands be changed from that of a territory to that of the forty-ninth state.

Right to Statehood Cited.

To demonstrate the right of the islands to statehood the people will quote you many figures. They will tell you the islands buy mainland products to the extent of more than $70,000,000 annually; that there is in the island property values of $385,565,812; that there are shipped to the mainland from the islands products valued at over $90,000,000 annually.

They will add that the islands have 184 excellent public schools employing 2,674 teachers and enrolling 83,319 students; that with all of the mixture of races there is only 15 per cent of illiteracy; that from 1900, to 1936 the population has grown from 154,000 to 384,000; that the people of the islands own and drive more than 50,000 automobiles; that Honolulu is one of the great ocean ports of the Pacific, with close to 1,300 ships of more than 1,500,000 tonnage, arriving and departing each year.

From such investigations as I was able to make, I would say that between 75 and 85 per cent of the people want statehood and an opportunity to vote for a President, but I did not discover why the congressional comittee voted against admitting Hawaii as the forty-ninth state, unless it was the reason assigned by people in the islands—politics.

Here Comes Shishak of Egypt

A GREAT evil that came to blight the northern kingdom was religious corruption and moral decay. One reason for that was the continued presence of thousands of Canaanites in the ancient cities of the north. In the south, where there had never been many cities, the Canaanites had been dispersed throughout the countryside and thus had been stamped out. But in Israel, where they had had cities in which to congregate, they had survived. And although they were a subject people for centuries, still they clung to thir ancient beliefs and practices. Indeed, instead of giving them up, these non-Hebrews succeeded in teaching them to their conquerors.

There was a further reason for apostasy in the northern kingdom. The continual stream of caravans from foreign lands brought the knowledge of many strange gods and cults to the Israelites. Judah in the south was safe from such foreign influences. Shut in among the hills, its men could remain unwavering in their loyalty to Jehovah. But Israel, with frontiers open to Phoenicia and Syria, and highways thronged with traders from every end of the earth—Israel could not escape corruption.

Such, in brief, were the differences between Israel and Judah.

The northern kingdom was three times the size of the southern.

Judah was rocky, dry, isolated, and exposed only to the raids of the Bedouins. It remained largely pastoral, and never saw much wealth. But perhaps for those very reasons Judah did not go so fast or so far toward destruction.

Let us return now to the story of the first two kings of Israel and Judah. Rehoboam, the heir to Solomon's throne, was spurned at Shechem by the rebellious northerners and forced to take refuge in Jerusalem. But he was far from reconciled to the loss of the north, and as soon as he was assured of the support of Judah he started to war on the rebels. The Bible records no incidents of this war, but I Kings 14:30 declares that it raged continually throughout the days of Rehoboam and Jeroboam. And this naturally gave the neighboring nations their long-awaited chance to plunder Palestine. Five years after Solomon's death, Shishak I of Egypt raided the war-torn land.

The invader did not confine his depredations to Judah. Although he had sheltered Jeroboam during the days when the latter was a fugitive from Solomon, the Egyptians did not hesitate to raid the territory of which Jeroboam was now king. But Rehoboam in Judah suffered by far the greater loss. Many of his fortresses were burnt to the ground, and the capital itself was robbed of much of the treasure which Solomon had stored there. The temple was stripped and five hundred gold shields adorning the armory were stolen. And Rehoboam, son of the fabulously wealthy Solomon, was left practically bankrupt.

Shishak withdrew but the two little kingdoms did not soon recover from the blow he had struck them. Vassals now to Egypt, and desperately poor, they began to fall away into degeneracy. Even in Judah, which had always been more faithful to Jehovah, the people took to worshiping stone pillars and wooden idols on every high hill and in every grove of trees. In Israel it was worse still. Jeroboam built two royal temples in his own realm, one at Bethel on the southern border, and another at Dan in the extreme north. Obviously his purpose was to keep his subjects from going over to Jerusalem in the enemy's territory to worship at the great temple there. But at the new shrines the worship was marked by idolatry and vice. Jehovah was still nominally the god; but the rites were largely Canaanitish.

The Fortunes of Two Kingdoms

REHOBOAM of Judah died about the year 923 B. C., after trying for some twelve years to crush the rebel kingdom in the north. Abijam, his son, succeeded to the throne and continued the war on Israel. But then peace ensued for a while, for Abijam's successor, Asa, was more interested in developing Judah than in accomplishing the downfall of Israel. Asa reigned some 41 years and during that time he labored most earnestly to cleanse Judah of the idolatry and vice which had crept into the land.

But Israel fared far worse during this half-century. Jeroboam, who had founded the kingdom, was succeeded by his son, Nadab. Within a few months of his coronation, however, Nadab was killed during a mutiny of the army, and the murderer, Baasha, usurped the throne. To insure his dynasty, Baasha killed off all the other descendants of Jeroboam; his own son, Elah, who succeeded to the throne, was in turn murdered by another usurper, Zimri. The army, however, did not favor Zimri, but chose instead a general named Omri to be king. Zimri, seeing his cause was lost, committed suicide after a reign of seven days, and then a new civil war began between Omri and another candidate for the throne, Tibini. Four years this wasteful contest continued, until Tibini was slain and Omri was left triumphant. The Bible tells us little about Omri save that during his reign the capital of Israel was moved to Samaria. The new site was on a hilltop in the very center of the kingdom. Omri, who was probably an able soldier, saw that the hill of Shomer — which means the "watch tower" — was magnificently adapted for a stronghold. It rose some three hundred feet above a broad and fertile plain, and commanded the countryside for miles around. Omri built a mighty stronghold there—one which in later years played no small part in the preservation of Israel.

We know that Omri was an able soldier because a Moabite inscription tells how he marched down and captured that region. But in another direction he met with severe reverses. The Arameans from Damascus captured several of his strongholds, and, fearing further encroachments, Omri made a treaty with Ethbaal, king of Tyre, in Phoenicia. To bind that treaty, Ethbaal's daughter, Jezebel, was married to Omri's son, Ahab. The alliance strengthened Israel's position among the nations, but in another way it had a dire effect. Jezebel brought with her the religion of her native god, Baal Melkart, and when her husband succeeded to the throne, she used her influence to make all Israel worship this god. She built temples to Baal Melkart in Samaria and elsewhere, multiplied the number of his priests, and tried to kill off the prophets of Jehovah. By making the Israelites worshipers of the Phoenician god, Jezebel was trying to make them subjects of the Phoenician king. In those days there was no distinction between church and state, and a nation was as much a religious as a political organization.

But Jezebel's plot was thwarted by a holy man named Elijah. He was one of that great galaxy of "troublers" in Israel whom we call the prophets.

But before that happened, many evils befell both Israel and Judah. The Arameans defeated the allied armies of both kingdoms, slaying Ahab in the course of one of the battles. A few years later Moab revolted and freed itself from the domination of Israel. And then Edom took courage and freed itself entirely from Judah. But such evils, being external, were of secondary importance. Far worse was the internal corruption that came to both the kingdoms. The Phoenician influence which Jezebel had brought to Israel crept over into Judah as well. This only aroused the prophets of Jehovah to greater activity, and before long the whole land was seething with unrest. Finally the revolution came. A young cavalry officer named Jehu, encouraged by Elisha, assassinated the king of Israel, flung Jezebel to the dogs, and made himself ruler. Then he corralled all the priests and worshipers of Baal in their temple at Samaria, slaughtered every last one of them, destroyed the building and desecrated the site. Thus was the Phoenician cult, and the royal house which fostered it, rooted out of the land of Israel.

A similarly dreadful episode occurred in Judah six years later. There, too, the reigning monarch was assassinated, and the abomination of the Phoenicians was drowned in the blood of its priests.

HOW ARE YOU TODAY

DR. JAMES W. BARTON Talks About

Dangers of "Slimming"

"IT IS interesting to note that the so-called reducing preparations on the market fall into three categories; first laxative that deny the body the benefit of its food intake as the salts, crystals and herb teas; second, obvious frauds that depend for effect upon the stringent diets as part of the 'treatment'; and third the unquestionably effective but dangerous articles containing thyroid or dinitrophenol, both of which act by speeding up the use of the food." I am quoting Mr. W. G. Campbell, chief of the Federal Food and Drug administration, Washington

What about the first kind of these preparations, the laxative? This is the use of epsom or other salts in patented form which act by not only causing diarrhoea and that much loss of water from the system but carry out with them some of the actual food products of the blood thus causing thinning of the blood—anaemia. As a matter of fact small doses of "salts" for a few days at a time may be helpful when the liver is sluggish and not filtering the poisons from the blood properly. The salts thus thin the blood and remove some of the poisons from waste food products. However, the use of salts for long periods of time and in the amounts often recommended for reducing, takes some of the body building elements from the blood and hence every cell in the body is deprived of these necessary food elements to some extent. Thus tuberculosis, anaemia, or a serious shock to the body can readily occur

The second kind of preparation that really depends upon reducing the food intake rather than any merit in the preparation is likewise dangerous because the amount of food advised being much less than the body needs, the body has to give up some of its fat and other tissues to supply the food needed to carry on the body's work.

Giving up its fat is, of course, of help in reducing weight, but other tissues of the body, muscle tissue, for instance, has considerable fat in it, which cannot be given up without damage to the muscle itself. And delicate nerve tissue needs fat to enable it to do its important work in the body.

Fallacy of Diet Fads

The reduction in the amount of food eaten is good treatment if the amount of reduction were not so great. An example of too much reduction is the 18-day diet that swept through the country a few years ago, resulting in hundreds of deaths and making invalids of many others.

The third method of reducing—the use of thyroid extract or the drug dinitrophenol overheats the body and so melts away fats and burns other tissues.

Research physicians record a number of cases where the use of thyroid extract to reduce weight has caused the dangerous type of goitre, permanently damaged the heart by overwork, and in other cases has made necessary the daily use of iodine and the need of almost constant rest.

While dinitrophenol in the hands of research physicians in San Francisco has met with a fair measure of success its unsupervised use has caused severe skin eruptions, cataracts to form in the eyes, and even death in a number of cases.

Sane Way to Reduce

Now there may be some cases where tiny doses of epsom salts daily for a few weeks may help remove liquid weight from the body and supply the body with an alkali to help overcome the acidosis that occurs during weight reduction. Also the slight reduction of food over a long period of time is bound to reduce weight without injury to the body.

And finally there are cases where the use of thyroid extract is the proper method of reducing weight. It is quite likely also that the day will come when with a pure preparation and under strict supervision dinitrophenol will be more generally used in weight reduction.

However, for 95 per cent of overweights the safe, sane and ever effective method of reducing weight, is to cut down on the food intake and, if physically able, increase the exercise.

Warm Weather Reducing

In spring and summer when the weather is warm, it should not be difficult for those seeking to reduce their weight, to cut down on all foods, particularly starch and fat foods.

This would mean that the amount of these kinds of foods—fat builders—could be cut down safely by one-quarter to one-half without causing any real discomfort.

The difficult thing would be to cut down on the liquids—water, soft drinks, ice cream—but a simple rule would be to take liquid whenever the feeling of thirst came, but to drink only half the usual quantity each time.

Finally, cutting down on the amount of table salt used in the cooking and with the meals, would mean that the fat tissue would be holding less water.

Gardener's Lament

I thought I'd plant a garden,
And raise myself some eats—
Fine lettuce, leeks and cabbage,
Potatoes, corn and beets

But birdies sat upon the fence,
And saw my lettuce seeds
They flew right down and ate 'em up,
And I grew only weeds

The beetles rose at four a m.,
And feasted on my beans,
Potato bugs ate up my spuds
And left disaster scenes

The cutworms awed my cabbage off,
The chickens ate my corn,
And had I been a man of wrath,
I really might have sworn

To get revenge on all these pests,
And end their lives in May—
I simply dug my garden up,
And now I play croquet

Bruce Orr, Garner, Is Awarded Local Contract

COLOR OF FISH EXPLAINED

The well dressed man and woman wear clothes that blend best with the color of their hair, eyes and complexions," says W W Aitken, Biologist for the Conservation Commission, "as well as those colors best suited for different seasons and climes; so do fish exhibit colors in keeping with their surroundings and environments

"Fish such as catfish, carp and other forms that live on muddy bottoms, show dull inconspicuous body color, while fish such as wall eyed pike, stone-rollers and small mouthed bass that live on less muddy bottoms of sand, gravel or rock, have streaks and splotches intermingled with a less dull body color

"The sunfish group and other types that prefer shallower water among the rushes and lillies where mottled shadows and spreckles of sunlight fleck and play in ever changing patterns, sport hues and shades of flashy brilliance along their sides These more varigated fish leisurely move about their favorite haunts in search of food that may be clinging and living on the aquatic plants.

"Then too, color seems to be closely related to particular sexes Sometimes the male fish is brightly colored during the breeding season, and in some cases like the bowfin the male fish has a prominent and permanent color marking, and as has been observed by any small boy that ever dangled a hook in his favorite 'fishing hole' fish often change their color or fade when lifted from the water This may be due to fright, anger, or merely involuntary reaction when the fish finds himself in an unnatural medium Pickerel have been observed to change their color patterns when moving from one weed patch to another

"Scientists have shown that a small gladular process at the base of the brain in fish controls their colors A microscopic view of a scale reveals many minute, colored granules below the transparent covering of the scale These small bodies are known as melenaphores which arrange themselves in proper order to produce definite markings that distinguish one species of fish from another.

Bid For Labor And Material Is $7,371.71

CONTRACT WAS LET BY BID BY TOWN COUNCIL FRIDAY

Orr Expects To Begin Work On Paving Within Next Few Days

There were a number of contractors in Klemme last week Friday to submit bids on paving the sides along Main Street's concrete slab for two blocks, and Bruce Orr Garner contractor was the lowest and best bidder His bid was $580 below the next lowest. Bids submitted to the Council were as follows:

|---|---|
| Bemis & Schlich | $8,462.34 |
| Fred Carlson | $8,270 73 |
| Amodeo Paving Co. | $7,952.28 |
| Bruce Orr & Son | $7,371 71 |

Mr Orr was in Klemme Tuesday making preliminary arrangements and to meet with the Mayor and Council Mr. Orr called at The Times Office and stated that he expected to begin work within a few days The job will be held up for a few days to get steel welded joints for the sections of the paving However, Mr. Orr was confident that work could be started in a week

The contract calls for the paving of a strip along each side of the Main Street slab for approximately two blocks, and will consist of 7 inches of concrete and steel reinforcements. A curbing and gutter will be run along the edge of the sidewalks along the project

The Curry Engineering Co. of Webster City will look after the surveys and inspection work as the project progresses.

The sand and gravel for the work will be trucked in from the sand pits at Clear Lake

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

And step by step since time began
I see the steady growth of man.

Whittier was a kindly old Quaker gentleman, with a devout belief in Providence, and a cheery optimism regarding his fellow creatures.

Living and Learning

Moreover, he was right.

That is not so easy to believe in these days of racketeers, but we have advanced since the times of the iron creeds of the older days.

Naturally, human nature hasn't changed much.

The phase of it which is being exhibited in central Europe just now is not pleasant to behold.

But Whittier lived in a time when men still talked of the old days—when men and women were burned as witches and when religious prejudices were rampant.

Throughout the country today religious tolerance is to be found.

Education, which in old New England was confined chiefly to the village schools, was often in the hands of poorly educated men, filled with prejudices.

All the great systems of hospitals, schools and opportunities for advancement have been built up chiefly since the time when the educational center of the country was confined largely to the states along the Atlantic seaboard.

There was little ease, and more hard work than was good for the men and women of the time.

But through it all the people lived and learned. By the time when Emerson, Whittier, Thoreau and many other really able and broad minded men had begun their work of building and teaching, the West was still "wild" in the sense that parts of it were populated by savages, and the greater areas were still forest and prairie.

How astonished would the men and women of that time be if they could come back and look at the industrial development of the country!

Today there are few "backwoods" districts. The schools are everywhere; old prejudices and superstitions have been forgotten.

There are havens for the afflicted poor. It is possible for any boy who has purpose and grit to get an education.

And even in the black days through which we just have passed there has been practically no absolute destitution.

I do not quite agree with the late Doctor Coue that "every day in every way we are growing better and better."

But in most ways we are growing better, and are learning all the time. And the longer we live and think the more intelligent we become and the greater grip we get on the fact that only by mutual helpfulness can we acquire real civilization.

All Around the House

When making cinnamon toast cut bananas in thin slices, arrange on toast, sprinkle with sugar and cinnamon and brown under the broiler.

If cherries or berries are rolled in flour before putting them into the pie crust the juice will be thickened and will not run out.

Squeeze into a tumbler the juice of half a lemon and fill with grape juice. Served cold this makes a delicious drink.

If lattices for rose bushes and vines that grow on the house are put on hinges it will be easy to lay them on the ground when painting your house.

Rub the electric iron once a week with paraffin applied on a soft cloth. This will keep iron clean and smooth.

Before polishing mahogany furniture wash well with warm water and white soap and dry thoroughly.

Fruit juices and ginger ale may be frozen into cubes in a mechanical refrigerator and used for iced drinks.

To remove mildew from a leather bag, rub with petroleum ointment and allow it to remain on bag until mildew comes off easily.

The ribs of an old umbrella may be used as stakes to tie plants to. They are not conspicuous in a garden.

Bedspreads Welcome Delicate Lilac Motif

PATTERN 1152

Dark and light lilacs, tied with a flourish into the loveliest of floral sprays, is far and away the nicest—and easiest—flowery touch one can give a bedroom. Even an amateur will find the large spray easy to embroider on a bedspread with four smaller sprays on the bolster, or scarf ends. The flowers are entirely formed of lazy-daisy stitch and French knots, the leaves of blanket stitch—the rest is in outline. With cotton or rayon floss the designs are seemingly done in no time, in shades of lilac, orchid, or palest yellow.

Pattern 1152 comes to you with a transfer pattern of a motif 18 by 21 inches and two reverse motifs 4 by 5½ inches. Color ideas; illustrations of stitches; material requirements.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps to The Sewing Circle, Needlecraft Dept., 82 Eighth Ave., New York, N. Y.

Ways of Giving

SOME men give so that you are angry every time you ask them to contribute; they give so that their gold and silver shoot you like a bullet. Other persons give with such beauty that you may remember it as long as you live; and say, "It is a pleasure to go to such men." There are some men that give as springs do; whether you go to them or not, they are always full; and your part is merely to put your dish under the everflowing stream. Others give just as a pump does when the well is dry, and the pump leaks.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Potent Explosive Is Produced From Cornstarch Waste

Product Has More Power Than Nitroglycerin

KANSAS CITY.—An explosive more powerful than nitroglycerin can be made from the corn product wastes of the nation, it was revealed by Prof. Edward Bartow, president of the American Chemical society, at the Chemists' convention here.

No mere dream is the new explosive and blasting agent which outdoes dynamite in potency. Powder companies are already investigating the new material, and if the costs can be lowered America will not only find its corn a valuable industrial commodity in the explosives field but a line of defense in time of war.

Sugar-Like Substance.

Basic material of the new explosive is a sugar-like substance, inositol, made from the waste "steeped" waters in which corn is soaked as a step in the manufacture of cornstarch. Inositol, said Professor Bartow, can be converted into an explosive known as hexanitroglycerin, containing six nitrogen atoms. Ordinary nitroglycerin is technically known by the chemical name of trinitroglycerin and has three nitrogen atmos.

The explosive hexanitroglycerin, Professor Bartow pointed out, has advantages over ordinary nitroglycerin because it is a solid compound instead of a liquid and can thus be used directly as a blasting agent, like dynamite. Its explosive properties are essentially the same as those of nitroglycerin.

Advantages Over Dynamite.

Dynamite is useful because it is a solid material and can be more easily handled than a liquid explosive. The inherent disadvantages of dynamite, Professor Bartow indicated, is that while it contains powerful nitroglycerin, the latter must be soaked up by sponge-like, non-reacting rare earths. Thus the solid dynamite is only part nitroglycerin. The rest is absorbent material.

The basic material inositol, from which such a super-explosive could be made, has been known for many years as a laboratory curiosity, said Doctor Bartow. It could be purchased on the open market in gram amounts for a cost of about $300 a pound.

Working at the State University of Iowa, where he is chairman of the department of chemistry, Professor Bartow and his assistant, Dr. W. W. Walker, have improved the process for making inositol, so that the cost per pound is only a fraction of the former price.

Bombs and Shells May Be Employed in War on Insects

WASHINGTON.—Man's war against insects literally will be a real one, with real guns, bullets, "shrapnel," "bombs" and loud explosions, if a new way of exterminating these enemies, described in a patent granted here to Otto V. Huffman of Bedford Hills, N. Y., works out as well as the inventor claims.

Shells loaded with charges of powerful insecticides are to be shot from guns to explode into clouds of deadly dust, to envelop trees and fields and make short work of the insects. In the same way, bombs or sticks of insecticide are to be exploded like dynamite to disseminate throughout the entire surrounding area an ultra-fine insect-destroying dust.

Can Use Shotguns.

According to the inventor, ordinary shotgun shells can be loaded in the usual way with compressed wads or slugs of insecticides, instead of lead shot. When such a shell is fired, he says, the force of explosion projects the wad or slug of insecticide like a bullet, except that after the slug has traveled a certain distance it breaks down into a cloud of ultra-fine dust.

At what distance this breakup will occur depends upon the make-up of the slug or wad—its compactness and moisture content. But this distance can be calculated, and shells can be loaded and marked to indicate how far the insecticide will travel before it explodes into a cloud.

Getting the Range.

Armed with an ordinary shotgun and as many rounds of these shells as necessary, the exterminator would go about the business of warring on insects something like this:

Say it is a tree he wants to rid of pests. He first judges the range to the top of the tree. Then he loads the gun with the proper shell, aims and shoots. The slug of insecticide explodes right over the tree.

Arsenic Becoming More Important in Modern Living

Harmfulness to People Depends on Reaction

THE complexities of modern life are bringing the general public more and more into contact with arsenic and its compounds. Examination of the blood and of kidney excretions will show that all of us are taking some arsenic into our systems, Dr. F. B. Flinn, director of industrial hygiene at Columbia University College of Physicians and Surgeons, told physicians at a meeting at the Brooklyn Academy of Medicine.

The public's contact with arsenic, said Doctor Flinn, "is in the food they eat as a result of sprays, food made by some process in which it may come in contact with acid containing arsenic as an impurity, or it may be from some dye or similar substances."

Tolerance for Poison.

How harmful this may be seems to depend on a number of factors. Large amounts of arsenic are poisonous. The effect of small amounts is uncertain. Certain susceptible persons may be affected by mere traces of arsenic while others show no symptoms though on examination they are found to have much larger amounts in their bodies.

A possible explanation of tolerance to arsenic may depend on the form in which it enters the body. Some salts of arsenic do not dissolve readily. Study of animals shows that when they are fed a form of arsenic that does dissolve readily, symptoms will always appear if enough of the arsenic is given.

Use in Industry.

Arsenic is not used extensively in industry, its chief use being in the manufacture of insecticides. There is a rapid turnover of workers in this industry, the men not remaining at work for any length of time, and this acts as a protection of the workers. Mechanical improvements in the method of production and better ventilation have lowered the hazard.

Other industrial workers who are exposed to some arsenic are pottery decorators, carpet makers, rubber compounders, copper founders and smelters, curriers, dye makers, electroplaters, enamelers, feather curlers, fur handlers and preparers, wall paper printers, sulphuric acid workers, metal refiners, linoleum colorers, galvanizers, glass mixers, lithographers, paper glaziers, paper hangers, taxidermists and shot makers.

"A careful analysis of these occupations indicates that there are two distinct exposures—one to dust and one to arsene," Doctor Flinn said. "The one is a direct exposure inherent to the work and the other one is an accidental exposure which may be the result of impurities in the material used."

Home Best Place to Protect Children From Tuberculosis

NEW ORLEANS.—A child can be better protected from tuberculosis by proper care in his own home than by spending a few months or a year in a preventorium. A study supporting this view was presented by Dr. Lewis J. Moorman of Oklahoma City at the meeting here of the National Tuberculosis association.

Figures from 18 years' experience at the Oklahoma City Tuberculosis Dispensary were cited by Doctor Moorman. During this period 1,156 children who would be considered eligible for preventorium admission were allowed to remain at home but were taught how to take care of themselves to avoid development of the active disease and were given as careful observation by the dispensary staff as possible. Of this number, only one child died of active tuberculosis while under observation.

Experience Disappointing.

This record, Doctor Moorman pointed out, bears out the experience of other physicians who have reported disappointing results of preventorium care and have even recommended its discontinuance.

The object of the preventorium is to give the child enough sleep, food and sunshine so that he can build up resistance to tuberculous infection and thus avoid the development of active tuberculosis. It is designed for children exposed to continuous contact with tuberculosis in the family or those children already infected with the germs but not yet sick with tuberculosis.

Noise Standard to Help the Hard of Hearing

NEW YORK.—Reliable standards for the guidance of the 5,000,000 men and women who need mechanical aids to hearing will result from the work of a new committee of the American Standards association.

Headed by Dr. Vern O. Knudsen of the University of California at Los Angeles, a group of manufacturers, specialists and users will develop national standards for measuring noise so that physicians and the deaf can select devices to aid hearing with scientific guidance.

California Gold First Found on Sutter Ranch

It was on the land of John Sutter, a Swiss emigrant to California, that gold was discovered. Sutter had gone there in 1839, and by the time California became United States territory following the Mexican war he was the owner of an immense tract which he called New Helvetia and which, from his "fort" located at the junction of the Sacramento and American rivers on the site of what afterward became Sacramento city, he ruled practically independent of the Mexican authorities. Sutter's fort was a sort of station for the few immigrant trains that had made their way overland to California and about it he had gathered a number of workmen who tilled his fields and cut timber in the hills to the east.

It was in digging a tailrace for a water-power saw mill on the south fork of the American river in January, 1848, that John Marshall, who had charge of the work, discovered the dull yellow particles that in a few months were to make Sutter's land the mecca of fortune seekers the world over. Marshall had tried to keep the discovery quiet, writes R. A. Barry in the New York Herald Tribune, but his workmen, a party of Mormons from the disbanded Mormon battalion that had been a part of the army General Kearny marched overland from Santa Fe, spread the news in San Francisco—and the gold rush was on.

Gold was found not only at "Mormon Island," which had been formed by the construction of the millrace but along both forks of the American river as well as along the streams that paralleled the American to the north and south. That Sutter was the owner of much of the gold-bearing land did not seem to matter. Claims were staked by all comers, and Sutter was left to petition congress for some sort of redress—which was never granted.

Gingerbread Love Test Is Popular Over Holland

One of the favorite dainties of the Hollanders is gingerbread. It is popular all over the country, and unlucky is the young man who goes courting without a supply of it, says a writer in the Boston Globe.

At the door his sweetheart meets him with the greeting, "Have you any gingerbread?" and if he has none, the atmosphere sometimes becomes decidedly chilly. If, on the other hand, he comes wisely prepared, he is assured of a pleasant evening the minute the gingerbread sack comes in sight.

At last the young man decides to "pop the question." That night he appears with a large cake under his arm, but gives no hint of the reason for his visit. The rest of the family, however, slips off to bed early, leaving him alone with the girl.

This is the fateful time. If she throws more peat on the fire, the young man understands that she loves him; they cut the cake and settle their future happily. Perhaps, though, the girl lets the fire die down; then her suitor realizes that she does not care for him and, bundling up the cake, he departs silently never to return.

Ancient News Service

On November 6, 1834, the United States Gazette, of Philadelphia, reprinted election returns from New York morning papers of the same day—"the most extraordinary despatch ever forwarded in this or any other country, for so great a distance, save by telegraphic signals." The papers were carried to Amboy, N. J., by steamboat in two hours and twenty-five minutes. From there, the Gazette explained, a locomotive of the partially completed Camden and Amboy railway "proceeded to the present termination of the road, 56 miles, in 2 hours and 15 minutes, and with a horse and sulky the remaining five miles were performed in 25 minutes"—total running time, five hours and five minutes.

The Statue of Liberty

The head of the Statue of Liberty was completed in time for exhibition at the Paris exposition in 1878, the forearm having been sent to Philadelphia for showing at the Centennial exposition in 1876. Thence it was transferred to Madison Square Garden, New York city, where it remained until the statue was formally dedicated in 1886, three years after the framework and base had been put into place. It rises 305 feet from foundation of pedestal to top of torch. The length of a hand is 16 feet 5 inches. The index finger is 8 feet long. The thickness of the head from ear to ear is 10 feet. The nose is 4 feet 6 inches long. The mouth is 3 feet across.

Insects on Ocean Surface

Halobates, insects that live on the surface of the ocean usually hundreds of miles from land, cannot right themselves after rolling over, an involuntary act that occurs when their backs get wet. Hence scientists wonder how these insects survive after they have been drenched by spray or rain.—Richard Jenks, Utica, N. Y., in Collier's Weekly.

Solar Systems

Our solar system lies near the center of that vast system of suns which lies within the circuit of the "milky way," and some scientists think that this central position is significant—that our sun and its planets occupy a position of greater physical stability than is possessed by other suns and their planets.

Saint Joan of Arc Was a Gentle Peasant Girl

Saint Joan of Arc, a gentle peasant girl who led the soldiers of France to victory at the siege of Orleans, was born in the village of Domremy, in 1412. While her brothers and sisters were sent out into the fields with their father, her mother kept Joan at home for the spinning and weaving. Thus she grew to strong and comely girlhood, known throughout the village for her gentleness, charity and piety, notes a writer in the Philadelphia Record.

Driven by visions (revelations from Heaven she believed them to be) to leave her home and make her way to the court of the uncrowned king of France, she prevailed upon him to accept her as the rescuer of his country. Clad in full armor, with sword and banner, Joan of Arc was mounted on a charger at the head of the French troops. Fired by her courage, they marched on Orleans, defeated the English and then marched on to Rhelms.

There, with Joan at his side, Charles VII was crowned king of France in the cathedral which was damaged almost 500 years later by the Germans in the World war. Joan's success was short lived, for in May, 1430, she was captured by the English, imprisoned for a year and on May 30, 1431, she was burned at the stake in the market place at Rouen. Twenty-five years later she was found innocent of the charges against her, and in 1919 she was declared a saint.

Ireland's Saint Blessed the Downpatrick Wells

Downpatrick, in County Down, thinks nothing of the simple statement that it was a place of importance long before the Christian era and the advent of St. Patrick When the old saint did arrive he found the Wells of Struell near by, which drew sick people every year for a cure. There was no chance of his changing the ancient custom, so he blessed the wells, and instituted a Christian pilgrimage to the spot on St. John's Eve which persists to this day, says a writer in the Los Angeles Times.

Then there is the mountain Slievenagriddle where are remains of a cromlech and a remarkable stone circle. This whole section must have been a center for Druid worship, for another of the finest stone circles in Ireland is west of Ballynoe. St Patrick combated this paganism by founding a monastery, on the stones of which the great cathedral of Downpatrick now stands. According to tradition, the remains of the Patron Saint lie here, now marked by a huge inscribed monolith.

Queen's Potraits on Stamps

The portrait of Queen Victoria graced all Grenadine postage stamps from 1861 until 1899, when the design was changed for the first time. This British colony in the West Indies lies at the southern tip of the string of islands forming the Windward group. The three important islands are Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and Grenada and a number of small islands in the Grenadine chain. They really form distinct colonies, since they all maintain their own institutions. They are, however, united under one governor-general who resides at Saint George's, located on Grenada. The name of the group comes from their position, being more exposed to the trade winds of the neighboring seas. Grenada, including all the small islands, has a total area of 133 square miles. The soil and climate are favorable for agriculture, and many tropical products are raised. Sugar, cotton, arrowroot, copra, cocoa and spices being the principal crops.

Early Post Riders

On August 30, 1776, hardly more than a month after the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, the Continental congress passed a resolution providing (in part) that "the communication of intelligence with frequency and despatch, from one part to another of this extensive continent is essentially requisite to its safety; that, therefore, there shall be employed on the several post roads a rider for every 25 or 30 miles, whose business it shall be to proceed immediately through his stage three times each week, setting out immediately on receipt of the mail, and traveling with the same, by night and by day, without stopping, until he shall have delivered it to the next rider."

Ships Built of Mahogany

During the Nineteenth century, and before, some of the finest English ships were constructed almost entirely of mahogany. One of the reasons for this preference lay in the fact that this wood was about 15 per cent lighter on the average than a corresponding cubical amount of oak or other woods. Another was mahogany's reputation for strength and durability. Among numerous vessels built wholly or partially from mahogany during the Nineteenth century were the Dart, constructed in London by T. Potts in 1810; the Eliza, brigantine of 180 tons, made in 1818 at Honduras from mahogany cut in the vicinity, and the steam packet Comet, built in Woolwich by Oliver Land in 1823.

People of the Ukraine

The people of the Ukraine are for the most part descended from the Ruthene immigrants from the North who, to flee the oppression of the Polish and Lithuanian nobles, "escaped to the frontier" where, though nominally under Lithuanian rule, they formed free democratic communities, and came to be known as Cossacks.

Making Snow Shoes in Maine.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WITH warmer weather gripping the southland, vacationists feel the appeal of northern climes. Each section of the country has its cool spot. Many easterners are lured to Maine, which is noted not only for its invigorating summer climate but also for its historic background.

The name of Maine may or may not be French; it certainly is not Indian, like Massachusetts or Connecticut. Of the sixteen counties, five recall the mother country, being named for English shires; five others honor American personages of the colonial or Revolutionary periods, and the remaining six retain the Indian names of the rivers within their borders.

As for the other names which have received specific legislative sanction for something over 400 cities, towns, and townships, the larger part are simply descriptive, or repetitions of towns in other New England states. Of the rest, so far as the origin of their names is known, 66 bear Old world names, so that in that delightful tale by Laura E. Richards, "Narcissa, or the Road to Rome," the roadside signpost might have pointed to Vienna, Belgrade, or even China, and kept within the jurisdiction of the County of Kennebec.

Proprietors and first settlers are known to have given their names to 58 towns; governors, generals, and Presidents to 16, 12, and 6 towns, respectively; while Indian names, which so plainly tell their own origin, number only 23.

An interesting touch of idealism was the selection of such distinctive town names as Harmony, Amity, and Hope; Freedom, Liberty, and Unity, these last three being neighbors in Waldo county.

From the beginning the economic life of Maine was founded on fish, fur, and forest. These three furnished powerful incentives for exploration and the chief rewards for settlement.

The fisheries of the Gulf of Maine were even an issue between king and parliament early in the Seventeenth century, when the English fishermen won their fight for free fishing along the Maine coast, despite the monopoly granted by James I in his patent to the council of New England.

Fisheries a Major Industry.

So it came that the earliest sites of permanent settlements were chosen not for mildness of climate, but by reason of proximity to the cold waters where dwelt the fish that could be converted into a profitable export, without license fee being paid to any patentees of the crown.

The fisheries continue a major industry The value of the state's fishing products as marketed approximates six million dollars, the two largest items being the plebeian herring and the aristocratic lobster.

Along with the ancient business of fishing a place must be given to the popular sport of angling, for which Maine offers unsurpassed inducements, in the lakes and streams and also offshore.

Last year 35,000 fishermen and fisherwomen from outside the state, and nearly five times that number of residents, obtained licenses. The fees received went directly to hatching, planting and protecting a new crop of game fish.

The state maintains 36 fish hatcheries and rearing stations, and from these last year went 17,000,000 trout, togue, and salmon for stocking the brooks, streams, and lakes. Nearly half of these "planted" fish were above legal size, and 10,000 weighed from 3 to 6 pounds each

The policy of protecting wild life is enforced by a corps of 100 game wardens, who seek to be big brothers to the youth of the state in training them to be good sportsmen. In the severe winter of 1934, airplanes were used to locate deer yards and then cedar trees were cut to feed the starving deer confined there by the deep snow.

Moose are far from being extinct. They can be shot only with a camera; but deer continue plentiful, 18,933 having been killed legally in 1933. More bears are killed in Maine than in any three other states. Grouse, woodcock, and ducks complete the game offering, with pheasants promised as a future attraction.

The Early Explorers.

As early as 1605 Capt. George Waymouth and his companions on the Archangel—many of them world travelers for that day—were deeply stirred by their first views of a Maine river which the captain named St. George's (now St. George).

An exploratory trip inland "toward the great mountains," the Camden hills, convinced them of the "beauty and goodness" of the land, as recorded by Rosier in his True Relation of that "most prosperous voyage." And the author boldly affirmed St. George's "to be the most rich, beautiful, large and secure harboring river that the world affordeth."

A few years later (1614), Capt. John Smith was less attracted by this eastern part of the region he named New England. Yet he saw fit to say of this coast, "Those barren Iles so furnished with good woods, springs, fruits, fish and foule, that it makes me think though the coast be rocky, and thus affrightable, the valleys, plains and interior parts may well (notwithstanding) be very fertile."

So moderate a statement must have been exceeded by other testimony of that day, since only a dozen years later another explorer on the Maine coast, Capt. Christopher Levett, a member of the Council of New England, felt it necessary to "debunk" certain other travelogues, not preserved for the modern reader. In reporting on his voyage of 1623-4, he remarks: "Nor will the Deare come when they are called, or stand still and looke on a man, until he shute him, not knowing a man from a beast, nor the fish leape into the kettle."

And he continues: "But certainly there is fowle, Deare, and Fish enough for the taking if men be diligent," which equally well describes the Maine of 1623 and 1935.

The discovery of this part of the North Atlantic shore is usually credited to John Cabot of Bristol, on his second voyage in 1498.

The honor of making the first detailed contributions to accurate geographic knowledge of Maine must, however, be shared by a Frenchman and an Englishman: Samuel de Champlain and the aforementioned Captain Waymouth.

In 1605 both Champlain and Waymouth were sailing along the Maine coast. So near did they come to meeting that in midsummer Champlain heard from an Indian chief on the Kennebec of the presence of an English ship ten leagues to the eastward, which was undoubtedly Captain Waymouth's Archangel.

The race was on between the French and the English; and the Maine region was destined to be eventful borderland for a century and a half in the contest for control between New England and New France.

Settled by Sieur de Monts.

The first settlement in Maine was made by Sieur de Monts, who in 1003 had obtained from the king of France a trading concession for Acadia, then defined as extending from Cape Breton island to the latitude of Philadelphia. With Chaplain as his lieutenant, De Monts set sail for the New world fully equipped for his colonization venture.

Some three months later, on June 26, 1604, a small island in a sheltered river was selected as best adapted for a fortified settlement and trading post. This island was named Saint Croix and was not far above where the river now bearing the same name empties into Passamaquoddy bay. Here, on what is now also known as Dochet island, was erected a group of dwellings in part built of timber brought from France, with a storehouse, dining hall, kitchen, and blacksmith shop. Gardens were laid out, all carefully planned by Champlain.

The site of this earliest but short-lived settlement in Maine, which antedated Jamestown, Quebec, and Plymouth, was not wholly obliterated.

Before the Pilgrims.

In a speech in congress 100 years after statehood was granted to Maine, Representative Robert Luce of Massachusetts, himself Maine born, remarked that Maine might more fittingly be called the older sister of Massachusetts than her daughter. And the records of early settlement and trade well bear out this contention.

On Capt. John Smith's map of New England of 1614, for example, the site which is now York was named Boston, thus locating in Maine, so far as maps go, the first New World Boston—and all this before the Pilgrims even landed!

When the Pilgrims set foot on Plymouth Rock, not a few Englishmen had already been sojourning on the Maine coast and even had wintered there. The welcome of the Indian sachem Samoset was in the Pilgrims' own tongue, learned from the fishermen on the Maine coast. Indeed, thirteen years before, in 1607, the Popham colonists built a fort in "that northern colony" which mounted 12 pieces of ordnance. They also erected a church and launched a 30-ton vessel—a fine record of English piety and preparedness.

MOIST RATION FOR HENS RECOMMENDED

Use Less Grain, Encourage Mash Consumption.

The dry or moist mash given hens has for its purpose the supplying of more protein in the ration than would be afforded by the whole grains alone. It is looked upon as the part of the ration particularly concerned in the formation of the eggs. While this is not wholly true, for both ground and whole grains take place in both egg production and nourishment and growth of the fowls, it is true in a measure and, without the higher protein content of the mash, egg formation would be hampered, though not stopped, according to an authority in the Rural New-Yorker. Hens do not like the ground mixed mash as well as the whole grains and, if given all they want of the latter, will neglect the mash. To encourage the eating of the latter, the whole grains are usually fed in limited quantity, or not at all, in the morning, while a dry mash is always available to them in guarded troughs or hoppers. At night, however, a full ration of whole grain is given, that it may give a full crop for night's nourishment. There is no fixed rule with regard to this. Some poultrymen give a little grain in the morning and perhaps some in the litter at noon but the idea is to encourage mash consumption by refusing the fowls enough whole grain to fully satisfy them through the day.

Three Broods of Chicks Give Supply of Layers

Keeping the house filled to capacity with layers is suggested as a solution of the laying flock mortality problem. This can be done by having three broods of chicks each year, according to D. C. Henderson, poultry extension specialist of the Pennsylvania State college.

If three broods of chicks are reared annually, the first brood may be placed in their quarters in January or February. The brooder house and equipment is used again in April and October for the second and third lots of chicks.

Poultrymen who have developed a good retail egg business, as well as those who sell their eggs wholesale, find the practice of hatching three broods of chicks each highly desirable.

October-hatched pullets lay small eggs when prices are normally low for all eggs. January-hatched pullets come into production in July and the size of their eggs increases with the rise in price. They, therefore, provide more and larger eggs during the fall. April-hatched pullets come into production in the fall when egg prices are at their highest and small eggs are sold at a greater differential in price than in April.

Producing Broilers

Under ordinary conditions it will take between seven and seven and one-half pounds of feed per bird to bring broilers to the two-pound weight, says an authority at the North Carolina State college. This will vary somewhat according to the vigor and vitality of the birds in reference to their ability to utilize feeds. The management of the birds during the fattening period will affect the feed requirements. An intensive fattening period will also make a difference in the amount of feed necessary. The figures given will, however, bring the average bird to the two-pound weight under ordinary farm conditions.

Culling for Breeding Birds

The cockerels and pullets to be used as breeders should be selected when the birds are from eight to twelve weeks old. Select only those birds that show good health and high vitality. A broad, deep, well-balanced head, prominent, bright eyes, full breast, and strong straight legs set squarely beneath the body indicate health and vigor. Watch the birds selected all through the growing season and those that lack vigor or are slow in developing should be discarded, advises a poultryman at the North Carolina State college.

Feeding Goslings

Do not feed goslings until they are a day and a half to two days old, or 36 to 48 hours from the time of hatching, at which time they should be fed a mush of stale bread soaked either in water or milk, advises a writer in the Los Angeles Times. Cracked corn, scalded, is also good, as is a mash of four parts cornmeal and one part middlings. But never lose sight of the fact that geese, even in their young stages, are primarily grazers, and that most of their feed should be grass.

Grow Greens for Poults

Because the digestive tract of turkeys calls for lots of bulk provision should be made for furnishing them an ample supply of green feed. Not only will greens insure good health by supplying them fiber, vitamins, and keeping their bowels in good condition, it will also help lower the feed cost. Tender greens should be fed to poults and when confined they should be finely chopped so as to prevent choking. For greens on range alfalfa or clover is recommended.

"A Man-Eating Barracuda"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

NEXT time you're out to Jones Beach State park and see a big husky blond Adonis in a life guard's suit, give him the high sign. He is Capt. William Johns of Jones Beach State park, Long Island, and he has had more adventures than you can shake a stick at.

Cap makes the club with a story of a fight he had with a giant barracuda. The barracuda, which is known as "the tiger of the seas," is just about the toughest and most dangerous fish in American waters. Those babies make a full grown shark look like a gold fish when it comes to downright ferocity.

Did you ever see a barracuda? They've got mouths on them like alligators with a double row of needle-sharp teeth that can cut a man's leg like a hot knife cuts butter. They don't come as big as sharks but are much more feared by fishermen who know.

Why, by golly, when you hook a small barracuda you've got to kill him before you pull him in the boat or it's just too bad. They can put up an awful fight even out of water and you'd better be sure he's dead before you try removing the hook or you're apt to lose a finger or a hand, depending on the size of the fish.

Cap Was No Munchausen About His Adventures.

Cap has been a seal hunter in the Baltic; a lumberjack in Canada; a soldier of fortune in Mexico; a sailor under many flags; a boxer and wrestler; a swimming instructor; life guard; a big game hunter and shark fisherman and a lot of other adventurous things but he says he never had a closer call than he had with that barracuda.

Cap, by the way, is the fellow who caught a seagull on the wing, down in Florida a few years ago. That trick was an accident but it's worth telling. Cap was fishing for sailfish and using live bait. He threw his line, baited with a small fish, into the air and the seagull swooped down and snatched the hook and bait before it touched the water.

I call catching a bird good fishing. Don't you? Cap let the seagull go, of course, and I'll bet that gull flew away a wiser but sadder bird.

Sea Tiger "Picks" on Life Guard.

The barracuda was something else again. Cap was acting as a lifeguard at the Roman Pools—a swimming club in Miami—when he decided to spear himself some breakfast. He waded into the water up to his neck and looked around for some nice luscious mullet. He didn't see any mullet that morning but he did see a big sand shark and drove his spear into its tough hide. Now a sand shark isn't dangerous like his man-eating cousin but the blood from the wounded sand shark attracted a passing sea bandit who was plenty dangerous.

That sea bandit was a hungry barracuda and he came straight for Cap. Cap knew what he was up against at a glance. He was glad he had his feet on the bottom. Expert swimmer as he is, Cap knew he wouldn't have a chance in deep water against the tiger of the seas. He knew too that he couldn't run away without taking a chance on losing a limb or two—perhaps his life.

The fish was nearly six feet long—the largest Cap had ever seen—and six foot of hungry barracuda is just about one hundred pounds of dynamite. Cap had two small spears with him and as he saw the flash of those terrible teeth he drove one home.

Cap Just Missed Being a Fish Dinner.

The spear broke off in the tough hide of the fish but didn't seem to phaze him. He leaped several feet out of the water and turning in the air opened that big alligator mouth of his and Cap says he thought it was the end.

Zowie! That foot-long mouth lined with dagger-like teeth snapped shut in Cap's face with a sound like a steel trap. Cap says he'd sooner hear Mauser shells singing around his head any day. He knew that on whatever part of his anatomy those teeth closed that part would come away.

The streak of silver shot at him again and Cap grabbed his second spear and, stepping aside, drove it with all his force into his enemy's body. A thrust like that would kill a man-eating shark or cause him to give up the battle but not a barracuda. Those babies just don't know the meaning of the word quit. They quit when they are dead and no sooner.

A Harpoon Finished Old Man Barracuda.

Well, sir, the second spear broke off the way the first one had and Cap found himself with only the wooden handle for a weapon. He started yelling for assistance, hoping that someone would have the nerve to bring him out a harpoon. But, he says, he wouldn't blame anyone for hesitating. The barracuda enjoys such a bad reputation along the Florida coast that most of the natives stay far away from his dental array. And I don't blame them.

But Cap Johns got a break. One of his life saving crew saved their captain. He saw Cap fighting for his life and grabbing a harpoon ran out in the water. The battle had been going on for over ten minutes when he got there. And he arrived just in time. Cap was just about exhausted and those snapping teeth were coming closer and closer.

Cap figured he couldn't hold out until the lifeguard got to him and he yelled for the other man to throw him the harpoon. The lifeguard threw the sharp weapon. The harpoon flashed in the sun and Cap grabbed it like a juggler and in one quick movement drove knife point into the jaws that were wide open to grab him!

And that was the end of Cap's barracuda as well as the end of Cap's adventure. And, if you don't think it was a close call, just take a peep at a barracuda's upper and lower plates the next time you get a chance. But don't get too close to him.

Old Name of Korea Was Restored After Treaty

Chosen became the official name of the country after the treaty of 1910 which made Korea part of the Japanese empire But the change of name is one of the least of the odds between the Koreans and Japan For Chosen was the ancient name of the country, and one it is reputed to have borne for most of 3,000 years, according to a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer

Korean traditions have it that the nation was founded by one Ki-tze, a Chinese counciler of state who entered the peninsula in 1122 B. C., with several thousand Chinese emigrants, and became king over them and over the barbarous natives he found dwelling there in cave. Ki-tze gave the country the name Ch'ao Hsien—morning freshness, or morning calm. Chosen is about as near as western tongues can approximate it.

The word Korea is said to be a European form of the native form of the Chinese name for one of three kingdoms into which the country was divided when it began to be visited occasionally by westerners a few hundred years ago.

The United States, in its first treaty with Korea, in 1882, recognized it as the kingdom of Chosen. In 1897, the king assumed the title of emperor, and the country the official name of Tai Han. In 1910, when the empire ceased to be, the old name was restored.

enator Joseph T. Robinson of Ar- sas, the majority leader, after ex- sing his own sense of loss, added: s work during the session has been difficult and trying. He was a t speaker."

President Roosevelt in a statement the White House expressed well the high esteem in which Mr. Byrns was held. Said he:

"Fearless, incorruptible, unselfish with a high sense of justice, wise in counsel, broad of vision, calm in adversity, and modest in victory, he served his state and the nation with fidelity, honor, and great usefulness. I personally mourn the passing of a steadfast friend of many years."

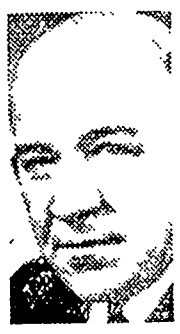
Impressive funeral services were held in the chamber of the house, the President, members of the cabinet and numerous diplomats being present in addition to all members of congress.

Senate Passes Its Own Tax Revenue Measure

THE senate passed the $820,000,000 compromise revenue measure by a vote of 38 to 24. The bill then went to conference with the house of representatives which had enacted a revenue measure carrying out tax proposals made by President Roosevelt. The senate measure called for a 15½ to 18 per cent tax on net corporate incomes as compared with the present 12½ to 15 per cent levy; a new type of 7 per cent tax on undistributed profits; repeal of the existing exemption of dividends from the 4 per cent normal income tax; an increase of 1 per cent in the individual income surtax on surtax brackets between $6,000 and $50,000. The house measure called for a tax on corporate net income scaling up to 42½ per cent, depending upon the amount of undistributed profits.

Chester Davis Appointed to Reserve Board

AGRICULTURE was given representation on the federal reserve board through the appointment by President Roosevelt of Chester C. Davis, administrator of the AAA to that body. In discussing his appointment, Mr. Davis said: "The fiscal policy of the federal government has never been tied in closely enough with agricultural problems." Mr. Davis has spent most of his life in agricultural activities. He was born on a farm in Iowa, was graduated from Grinnell college and later owned and operated a farm. For some years he was a newspaper publisher and then became editor of the Montana Farmer.



Doctor Tolley

Mr. Davis was succeeded as AAA administrator by Dr. Howard R. Tolley. Nationally known as a soil expert, Doctor Tolley helped Mr. Davis draft the soil conservation plan, enacted after the United States Supreme court decision invalidated the AAA. He has been carrying on this program during the absence of Mr. Davis in Europe.

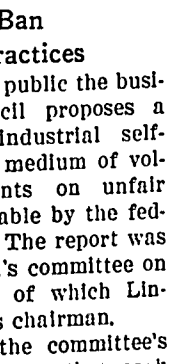
Filene Plan Urges Ban on Unfair Trade Practices

IN A report just made public the business advisory council proposes a simplified basis for industrial self-regulation through the medium of voluntary joint agreements on unfair trade practices enforceable by the federal trade commission. The report was prepared by the council's committee on unfair trade practices of which Lincoln Filene of Boston is chairman.

Outstanding among the committee's proposals were suggestions that each branch of an industry, such as wholesale, retail, and manufacturing, police the activities of each other through confidential reports to the federal trade commission and that no attempt be made to include trade practice and labor provisions in the same agreements.

Sir Samuel Hoare Back in British Cabinet

CALLED back to the British cabinet, which he left some months ago as a political scapegoat, Sir Samuel Hoare was made first lord of the admiralty, to succeed Viscount Monsell. Sir Samuel, who boldly faced a hostile house of commons last December to defend his part in the Anglo-French peace plan which would have given Mussolini only a part of Ethiopia, will face the task of solving problems arising out of British-Italian fleet difficulties in the Mediterranean. The biggest task facing Hoare, however, is restoration of the British navy to an undisputed position of supremacy on the seas.



Sir Samuel Hoare

Industrial Mobilization Plan Is Condemned

THE so-called industrial mobilization plan of the War department, providing for a military dictatorship over labor, capital and industry, as well as censorship of the press in war-time, was severely condemned in a report to the senate by the munitions committee.

The committee objected particularly to the proposed conscription of labor as being dangerous to democracy.

California, Here I Come

SOMEONE besides the movie press ought to get busy and sing the praises of California. For California always does things on the grand scale.

A couple of visitors from Connecticut went out there one summer. One of them was so overawed by the size of California mountains that he turned back home, but the other remained.

This fellow stayed one night at the house of a native Californian. He confessed, at breakfast, he liked an egg and he liked it soft boiled. What did they do but wheel in an egg the size of a flour barrel, place it beside the lady of the house and chisel into it with a billiard cue.

When questioned, the host confessed that the egg wasn't the work of a single hen but had been laid co-operatively by his entire flock.

After breakfast the visitor left. He reached a river before noon and was ferried across by a strange-appearing craft.

"Is this business a paying one?" he asked the ferryman.

"Hardly enough to pay for raising the boat, stranger," was the reply. "This boat was grown as a pumpkin, mister. Cut from a pumpkin shell, raised in that patch over thar."

"Over by that barn?" asked the visitor from Connecticut.

"Barn?" replied the native. "Say, that was a pumpkin, too. But I blasted a hole in it and now I let the stock inside whenever there's wet weather ahead."

Dog Tale

THE year Paul Bunyan established his lumber camp on the Big Onion river he had a great deal of trouble with rats and mice. They ate up the scraps of buffalo milk pancakes that Big Joe, his camp cook, made and grew to be as big as two-year-old bears.

So Paul sent over to Michigan and got a pup that was part wolf and part elephant hound and began feeding him on bear milk. In a little while this pup, whom Paul named Sport, was big enough to clean up all the rats and mice around the camp, so Paul decided to send him after bigger game. He trained Sport to become a moose terrier and all Big Joe had to say was "Sport, go out and get me a mess of moose," and Sport would do it.

One night Sport was playing around the horse barn when Paul mistook him for a mouse. Quick as a flash he hurled an ax at the animal and to his horror found that he had cut Sport in two. Quickly realizing his mistake, Paul picked up the two halves, stuck them together, gave the dog first aid and bandaged him up with strips torn from 87 horse blankets.

The next morning Paul discovered that in his haste he had twisted Sport's two halves so that the hind legs pointed straight up. But this proved to be an advantage after all, for the dog learned to run on two legs a while, then flop over without loss of speed and run on the other two.

Sport was a good trailer, too. Once when he was out in the woods with Paul they discovered the skeleton of a moose that had died of old age. Just out of curiosity Paul picked up the back tracks of the moose and showed them to Sport. So the dog started back over the moose's trail, and before sunset he had led Paul clear back to the place where the moose was born.

The Grateful Rattlesnake

C. M. TATHAM, editor of the Sabine County Reporter at Hemphill, Texas, doesn't agree with most people that the rattlesnake is always cold-hearted. That's because of an experience of a farmer in his community.

This farmer found a rattlesnake caught in a steel-trap. Taking pity on the snake, he released it and it quickly slid away in the chaparral.

But imagine his surprise, upon returning home, to find that the rattlesnake had followed him. The reptile acted so friendly that the farmer didn't have the heart to drive it away and it soon became one of his favorite pets.

That winter the farmer moved from his ranch into town. The snake again followed him and made its home under the house. One cold night it coiled up on the doorstep and looked so pathetic that the farmer allowed it to sleep under the stove in the kitchen.

The next morning the farmer heard a commotion downstairs. Rushing into the kitchen he saw a strange sight. A burglar was trying desperately to release himself from the grip of the snake which was coiled tightly around his neck with its tail stuck out the opened window and rattling frantically. A moment later a squad of police burst into the kitchen door. They had heard the snake's burglar alarm and had come to capture the culprit and lead him away to jail.

The Rings of Saturn

The rings of Saturn spin around the planet rapidly. It is believed that they consist of a swarm of separate particles, each following its own independent orbit. By means of a spectroscope the velocity of any point of the ring has been determined and it has been found that particles on the inner edge of the ring revolve about the planet in approximately five hours, while those on the outer edge require about 14 hours for one revolution.

RURAL DAMAGE BY FIRE

Property damage by fires in rural districts is caused by defective flues, lightning, spontaneous combustion in hay and grains, and unsafe methods of lighting, and amounts to $250,000,000 in the United States annually. Except in rare cases, such as an oil explosion, where smothering methods are best, pressure water streams are the only effective protection against fire.

Flower Of Liberty

By Oliver Wendell Holmes

When those fleeting flaming glories
Were displayed across the sky
In remembrance of the stories
Of brave men in days gonee by,
Then we though of deeds of daring
And of clear and steadfast minds
That had set the country faring
Safe through tempestuous winds.

Then we pondered on the toiling
And the watches of the night;
Of the suffering and despoiling
Braved in reverence of the right.
And each memory we cherish
Shall not fade away and die,
Shall not be allowed to perish
Like a rocket in the sky.

Funeral Services Held Today For Fred Janke

FRED JANKE PASSED AWAY MONDAY EVENING, JUNE 29

Funeral services for Fred Janke 86, who passed away at the home of his son, Henry Janke, Monday evening, June 29th, were held at the Klemme Reformed church this Wednesday afternoon with the Rev. Calvin Grosshuesch in charge. Interment was made at the Klemme Calvary Cemetery.

Obituary

Fred Janke was born on the 26th day of June, 1859 at Dauer, Brandenburg, Germany He received baptism and was confirmed in the Lutheran church On the 2nd of May 1875 he was united in marriage to Miss Mathilda Fromm of Strassburg, Germany

In 1880 the family came to America and settled on a farm near Ackley, Iowa where they remained 12 years. From there they moved to Meservey and after 9 years to the Klemme community. In 1924 Mr. and Mrs. Janke moved to Klemme.

Of the seven children, 2 died in infancy and one son, Frank, who lived in Canada, died three years ago. The surviving children are Mrs. Bertha Kluseman, of Clear Lake; Mrs John Neuberger, Henry Janke and Mrs. Wm. Waddingham all of Klemme.

Mr. and Mrs. Janke were members of the Klemme Reformed Church. They were satisfied and happy in their humble home where the children and the many friends were welcome at all times. Grandfather Janke was a kindhearted man who proved himself loyal and true to his friends. Mrs. Janke died about 7 years ago, and since that Mr. Janke has spent most of his time in the home of his son, Henry About 6 years ago he began to fail in health. He was called from this life Monday evening, June 29 at the age of 86 years and three days He is survived by a son, 3 daughters, 31 grandchildren and 29 great grandchildren.

DRIVERS LICENSE CAMPAIGN IS ON IN FULL FORCE

Patrolmen Ordered To Inspect Permits of All Drivers

An order issued by Mrs Alex Miller, Secretary of State, for highway patrolmen in her department to stop motorists on the highways andrequire them to show their drivers permit, was completely worked out by Lew Wallace, head of the motor vehicle department, and will soon be put into effect.

Mrs. Miller reported that information had been coming to the department to the effect that various persons whose licenses were under suspension or revocation, or who had been refused licenses by the Department for other reasons, were operating on the highways.

In consequence, an order is being issued to the Patrol to check on all operators licenses as closely as the limited personell will permit She called attention to the fact that the law requires the operator to carry the license at all times when operating a motor vehicle, and in order to assist in the prosecution of those who are illegally operating, she is asking the cooperation of all properly licensed drivers in having their license with them at all times.

The policy of the Department will be to file charges against all persons who do not have proper license in their possession. The cooperation of sheriffs, police and local officers will be solicited

The people who are operaitng illegally are a menace to traffic, and are in many cases avoiding the penalty of a serious driving violation, and for the general protection of the public, these drivers must be removed from our highways. In fact, the limited information available to the motor vehicle department indicates that the drivers who are operating illegally are in most cases, or have been, serious offenders.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate.—WNU Service.

"Manana," meaning tomorrow, is the usual answer a foreigner receives if he asks a Central or South American to do a piece of work which will be well paid for when it is performed.

You Can't Rely on Tomorrow

Perhaps it is the heat. Perhaps it is just the nature of the South American native. But it cannot be wholly his nature, for when a war is going on he can fight hard and consecutively.

I have known many men who were not at all lazy, who would toil like Trojans after they started, but the difficulty of getting them started was so great that few people would take the trouble. I think most of us are a little like that. There are men—and I know some of them, who love work as fat men love food, and who are never happy when they are idle. But to most men, the business of getting started is unwelcome.

I have told before the story of Balzac, the astoundingly prolific French novelist. He loved to loaf, as many other men do, but he knew that if he didn't write there would be neither food nor fame for him. Being quite able to use both of these, Balzac hired a man whom he charged with the duty of chaining him to a chair, and not unchaining him till an adequate number of pages had been written.

Sometimes the novelist would get restive, leave off his writing and suggest to his keeper that enough work had been done for the day. But the servant was inexorable. When the regular number of sheets were unfilled, there was no furlough for M. Balzac. He would beg and plead with his servant, but all in vain. At last with a weary sigh Balzac would take up his work, and write furiously so as to get to an end of the business of that day. The world ought to remember that servant as a real benefactor of the race.

Happy are the people who escape from the curse of restlessness or laziness. It can soon become almost a disease. It has ruined the prospects of many people who without it would have been among the keenest minded and most useful of people. But since it exists, it must be taken into calculations.

If you have this restlessness or laziness, your work will be twice as hard, for you will cull out little holidays all the time and have to toil doubly hard making up. It is fortunately a fault that many people lack. But they are the lucky ones. If you have it get rid of it, and get rid of it as soon as it is humanly possible. If you don't, you will run for the rest of your life at half speed, and probably not arrive in a very desirable destination when you should be taking life more easy.

Things That Last

Beauty, money and fame cannot be carried beyond the horizon line that shuts around this cradle of a world; but love, joy, peace, gentleness, faith, meekness, temperance, are jewels which by their very nature will survive the transit of the world invisible.—F. E. Willard.

NEW KITCHEN STOVE MAKES ITS OWN GAS

Housewives Marvel at Coleman Range That Lights Instantly Like City Gas—Cooks a Meal with 2c Worth of Fuel

A new kitchen range that offers every cooking convenience of the finest city gas range is now available to housewives, wherever they live.

W. C. COLEMAN

W. C. Coleman, pioneer inventor of gas-pressure appliances, brings to a lifetime of inventive genius his crowning achievement in this amazing new Coleman Safety Range. This new stove makes its own gas from ordinary, lead-free gasoline. A patented method of carburization converts liquid fuel into gas, much the same as in present day automobile engines.

The Coleman Range lights instantly, like city gas. Its fuel-saving Band-A-Blu Burners, another of Mr. Coleman's outstanding developments, produce a clean, clear-blue flame, so hot that a low flame does all ordinary cooking. Tests show an average family meal for five takes about 2c worth of fuel.

Coleman Ranges are finished in gleaming porcelain enamel. Their pleasing colors combine outstanding beauty with unequalled performance.

Readers of this paper wishing full information about these wonderful new Coleman Ranges will receive beautifully illustrated literature and a valuable stove check chart by simply addressing a postcard to Mr. W. C. Coleman, Dept. WU-236, Wichita, Kansas.—Adv.

Quarries Beneath Paris May Provide Air-Raid Shelters

Half of City Underlain by Artificial Caverns

PARIS.—War-raid shelters for the population of Paris might be made out of the vast honeycomb of old underground quarries that underlie the city, suggests Prof. Pierre Devaux of the Ecole Polytechnique.

Very few people, even among Parisians, know anything about these old quarries, Professor Devaux states. Yet to a large extent Paris owes its very existence to them, for much of the limestone used in the city's buildings, and vast quantities of gypsum also, have been obtained from them. The name "plaster of Paris" is true in a very literal sense: the original material was made and used in Paris, out of gypsum dug from underneath Paris.

Far-Reaching System.

There is a public Quarries commission in Paris, that has charge of these far-ramifying artificial caverns. Their maps, though admittedly incomplete, show that perhaps half of the heart of the city, on both banks of the Seine, is underlain by abandoned quarries. In some of them are the famous catacombs of Paris, containing millions of skeletons.

Professor Devaux does not propose that the living should take refuge among the dead. He rules out catacombs, in his proposed scheme of shelters. He also considers the old gypsum quarries unsuitable, because of the frequent rock falls from their roofs. But the tunnels and rooms of the limestone quarries he considers safe and suitable.

Extensive Project.

Much work and expense would be necessary to make the old caverns safe. Many new entrances would have to be dug, for the old entrances are far too few in number, and too inconveniently located, to enable thousands of people to get underground in the few minutes allowed by an air-raid warning.

Ventilating systems would bave to be provided, and means for preventing the infiltration of poison gases. There would also have to be large installations of water reservoirs, toilet facilities, and other necessities for large-scale temporary occupancy. But Professor Devaux considers his scheme practicable, if undertaken in time.

Discovery of New Lung Function Solves Old Human Blood Puzzle

CHARLOTTESVILLE, VA.—Studies which clear up a 50-year-old puzzle about human blood were reported by Dr. William H. Howell, emeritus professor of physiology in the Johns Hopkins university, at the meeting here of the National Academy of Sciences.

The puzzle was to find where the platelets of the blood are formed. These platelets are little flattened discs which are important because one of their functions is to make blood clot after it has been shed.

The platelets are formed in the lungs, Doctor Howell found.

New Discovery.

This is an entirely new idea. Although the platelets were discovered more than 50 years ago and there have been all kinds of theories as to their origin, function and fate, no one has ever thought of looking in the lungs for their birthplace. Until now medical scientists have thought these important platelets were formed in the marrow of bones where the red blood cells and many of the white blood cells are made. The generally accepted view, proposed by Wright, is that they are produced in the marrow from a species of giant cell, to which Doctor Howell, many years ago, gave the name megacaryocyte.

Now Doctor Howell comes along with the experimental proof that the platelets are made in the lungs. The first evidence was finding that as the blood flows through the lungs it picks up platelets. The arteries always contain more than the veins.

Midget Camera Films Vocal Cords in Action

VIENNA.—A motion picture camera so small and compact that it can be pushed into the larynx, to take films of the vocal cords in action, has been invented by two Viennese scientists, Dr. Kamillo Wiethe, a physician, and Dr. Franz Gerhard Back, an engineer. It is expected to be useful in at least three ways: to study the mechanics of the voice, particularly in famous singers; to investigate the physiology of the production of the various vowel sounds; and as an aid in the diagnosis of throat diseases, particularly those with a nervous involvement.

Experiments May Aid Farmer With Better Secondary Highways

Cotton Now Employed as Material in Road Making

NOT the least of the aids for farmers now under way are the efforts to do something, finally, about the state of the secondary roads over which produce is trucked to market.

Along with "cotton" roads and "salt" roads already mentioned in the press is a new type cement-soil road under study in South Carolina. In the sandy soil of the Palmetto state, road engineers have a good highway material if a suitable binder for the base can be found. New studies reported by Charles H. Moorefield, state highway engineer, indicate that cement will do the trick.

Cement is spread over a sand-clay road and mixed into the soil with scrapers. A heavy sprinkling of water follows and then comes a thorough packing with rollers.

Cement Vs. Cotton.

Atop such a cement-sand base the usual bituminous surface is applied.

Cotton roads, so-called, contain very little cotton; only a few bales to the mile.

As with most secondary, lightly-traveled roads the aim is to prevent separation of the top surface from the base and thus decrease wrinkling or washboard effects, holes and general erosive deterioration.

Cotton webbing in wide sheets is laid over the crushed stone base of the "cotton" roads and bituminous adhesive material applied. Then above it comes the finer crushed stone for the top surface.

Outside of the South and the farming regions most people will be aware of cotton roads through their growing use in airport runways. Contracts have recently been signed for the building of such a runway at the big airport of Newark, N. J., which serves metropolitan New York.

Experiment With Salt.

Roadways of "salt" are being experimented upon at Cornell university Again the term should not be taken literally, for New York state is not building roads like those of the great Utah salt beds over which Sir Malcom Campbell sped to his 300-mile-an-hour record. Unlike cotton, however, salt is not used solely as a binding material between the base and top surfaces. The salt is mixed into the natural clay of the road and serves to keep it moist.

Everyone knows how sticky and cohesive clay can be if wet or moist. Farm-to-market roads in spring amply testify to that fact. The trouble comes in the summer when the road dries out; dust forms and is blown away.

Indians' Birth Rate on Upgrade While Whites' Shows Loss

NEW HAVEN, CONN.—Decline and oblivion are not to be the Indian's fate, if a high birth rate has anything to do with the question. The birth rate of the Plains Indians "is about the highest in the world, 48 per thousand," Prof. Clark Wissler of Yale university informed the meeting of the American Association of Physical Anthropologists here.

This is in striking contrast with the declining birth rate of the white population, which dipped under 20 per thousand even before the depression began.

Indians Not Dying Out.

The persistent notion that the Indians are a dying people probably dates from their troubles when they first were placed on reservations. At that time, Professor Wissler said, there was a rapid decline in the redskin population, but it has been followed by recovery.

But even the shock of being caged in reservations had apparently no effect on the high Indian birth rate, which has had little change since about 1800. The decline was due to a much higher death rate, which reached its tragic climax about 1890, and has since declined.

Smoking Dulls Taste for Salt and Sweets

WASHINGTON.—If you reach for a smoke, you will not be able to taste your sweets very well.

Smoking tobacco dulls the acuteness of taste for both sugar and salt, it has been found in experiments conducted at Catholic University of America, here, by Dr. John E. Rauth and James J. Sinnott. But the effect is not permanent; when the smoking is stopped, the ability to taste returns to normal.

Six habitual smokers who planned to give up smoking for a period volunteered as subjects in the experiment Tests were used to determine the weakest solution of sugar and of salt that could be tasted by each one.

Then they stopped smoking. Their taste became more acute, so that they could taste solutions of sugar only about half as strong as their former limit. Salt could be tasted in solutions about two thirds as strong as formerly.

POULTRY FACTS

LICE, MITE, FLEA, ENEMIES OF HENS

Some Pests Can Live Years Without Food.

By Prof. Glenn W Herrick, New York State College of Agriculture.
WNU Service.

The hen that supplies the nation's daily breakfast food does her job well, even though many enemies war against her. At least nine different species of lice, several species of mites, and at least two species of fleas attack the hen.

Some enemies of the hen, like the common poultry mite, are so small that they would run about thirty to an inch. Some live on bits of feathers and scales of the skin; others are bloodsuckers. Some cannot live for more than a few days away from the hen; yet the fowl tick has been known to live without food for three years at a time.

Fowls are often affected with a disease known as scaly leg or scabby leg, caused by a very small mite scarcely visible to the unaided eye. The bird eventually becomes lame. Fowls sometimes develop the habit of pulling out their own feathers, even those from others. Most often this habit is due to a tiny itch mite which lives at the base of a feather.

In contrast with lice, the common poultry mite is not a permanent resident on the hen. It might be described as the chicken bedbug, for it attacks the fowls at night and leaves in the morning to hide in cracks and crevices of perches. During the night the mites swarm over the fowls, gorge themselves with food, irritate the hens, and cause them to lose rest and sleep.

Poultrymen have learned to combat these enemies of the hen through chemical and other means.

Double Yard Plan Helps to Check Contamination

Ground on which poultry has run for several years may become "chicken sick," according to H. H. Alp, poultry extension specialist, University of Illinois. The greatest contamination usually exists in the ground nearest the poultry house, particularly when the flock is large.

Now is a good time to plow up the yards and prepare for an abundance of green feed for the flock. A two-yard system is recommended where the flock is large enough to warrant this additional trouble. Double yarding helps to prevent serious permanent soil contamination and also provides a means of having green feed available over a longer period. Crops commonly used in poultry yards are wheat, rye, oats and rape. Wheat and rye are best used early in the spring. Oats and rape are more suitable for summer cropping. Swiss chard makes an excellent summer crop to be fed to birds confined to houses and yards, according to Alp. Laying birds should not be allowed to eat any large quantity of rape, as it has a tendency to darken the color of the egg yolk.

Feeding Skimmilk

Liquid skimmilk should preferably be fed to the flock from earthenware, tin, aluminum or graniteware fountains and dishes. As a rule the milk combines with the zinc in galvanized ware and forms zinc lactate, sometimes bad for chicks and ruinous to the container itself. If necessary to use such containers, fill the galvanized dish with milk and set it away in a warm place for a day or so, then throw away the milk and scrub the dish. This removes most of the undesirable soluble material and the dish will be safer for use in feeding.—Wisconsin Agriculturist.

Poultry Hints

Eggs should be handled as carefully and skillfully as meat or butter.

Hen houses open to the air and sun, dry and well ventilated, are easy to keep clean.

Cleanliness is the keynote in profitable poultry keeping, and is also the best aid in checking the inroads of parasites.

The quality of an egg does not always depend upon the egg's age.

Green feeds commonly used for farm flocks include beets, cabbage, carrots and sprouted grains.

It requires 48 eggs to make a pound of dried yolk, and 15 dozen eggs to produce a pound of dried albumen.

Farm chicks should grow evenly and rapidly, and turn foodstuffs economically into saleable flesh and eggs.

Corn or sunflowers will provide August shade for the poultry flock.

Hens which show excessive yellow pigment should be culled in late summer.

The future of a flock depends a great deal on the proper handling and feeding of breeding birds.

Four to six weeks after hatching begin to feed the grain mixture to chicks in hoppers, and keep it constantly before them.

"Flying Laboratory" for Amelia Earhart

This Lockheed all-metal monoplane was built at Burbank, Calif., as a "flying laboratory" for Amelia Earhart on order from the Amelia Earhart Fund for Aeronautical Research, and the famous flyer is seen inspecting it. After tests and trial flights she will fly it to Purdue university, Indiana, where the program of research will be carried out. The plane is powered with two Pratt and Whitney Wasp engines of 550 horsepower each, driving Hamilton constant speed metal propellers. Instead of passenger seats, it carries additional fuel tanks for extended non-stop flights. Special instruments include a Sperry robot pilot, de-icing appliances on the leading edge of the wing and stabilizer, and a new type fuel analyzer which enables fuel consumption to be kept at a minimum under all flying conditions. Radio homing device and two-way radio telephone are also installed in the pilot's compartment.

Landon's Is Typical Kansas Family

All Nation Helps to Notify Landon

Topeka Prepares for Vast Throngs at July 23 Ceremonies

TOPEKA, KAS.—Plans are under way to welcome representative thousands of visitors from all over the United States for the ceremonies in which Gov. Alf M. Landon will be formally notified of his nomination as the Republican candidate for the Presidency. The notification will take place at the state capitol July 23 at 8 p. m

To facilitate the attendance of the vast throngs who will pledge their support to Governor Landon in the November election, railroads have announced special reduced rates of one cent a mile for the occasion. Topekans already are busy arranging for parking facilities for the additional thousands who will make the trip in automobiles, and preparing the hotels for the enormous influx of visitors

Several large groups from Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis and other cities of the Middle West have indicated plans for chartering airplanes, busses and railroad trains to make the trip.

Even now the streets of the Kansas capital are bearing an unaccustomed load of automobile traffic, carrying steadily increasing tourist hordes bent upon a first-hand glimpse of the man whose popularity, with the speed and force of a typical prairie cyclone, has endeared him to the hearts of millions of Americans as the one to lead the nation out of the mire of "three long years" of New Deal sovietisms, blunders and waste.

THOUSANDS RALLY TO G. O. P.

Chicago, Ill.—Dollar contributions to the campaign fund of the Republican National committee are rolling in at the rate of 4,000 a day, according to George A Paddock, chairman of the committee named to raise a million dollars by the sale of "participation certificates." Paddock reports that the donors to date have included many Democrats and independents who prefer Landon and Knox to Roosevelt and Garner.

The contributor who sends his dollar to Republican National Committee, Drawer S, Chicago, Illinois, receives in return a certificate which may be framed. The dollar is split "fifty-fifty" between the national committee and the county committee where the contributor lives.

Vote Half U. S. Highway Funds to Two States

Washington, D. C.—With Secretary of the Interior Harold L. Ickes openly lobbying on the floor of the house, the lower body and the senate passed the "Blue Ridge pork bill" which calls for the construction of a 477-mile parkway through Virginia and North Carolina

Federal highway funds, under the terms of the bill, will be given the two states outright; other states have to match federal funds dollar for dollar in highway programs. The total costs for the project will be approximately 48 million dollars, or nearly half the amount appropriated to all the states for highways.

The Rise of Hidden Taxes

Washington, D. C.—Hidden, or indirect, taxes, which are borne largely by the poor, paid 16 per cent of the cost of the government from 1928 to 1932 Since 1932 they have paid 59 per cent of the cost.

BALANCE IN KANSAS

Topeka, Kas.—Kansas, whose Gov. Alf M. Landon's policy is "deeds, not deficits," was expected to close its books on a balanced budget at the close of the fiscal year, with a bigger amount of cash on hand than it had at the end of the 1935 fiscal year, according to the report of J. J. Rhodes, state treasurer. Rhodes reported that the unencumbered cash balance in the state's general fund May 31 was $1,572,481, compared with $889,591 at the same time last year.

Wallace Paid 300 Firms 38 Million

Bares Names of Producers Who Received More Than $10,000 from AAA

WASHINGTON, D. C.—The AAA paid $38,460,000 to some 300 producers in three years for not raising crops they were in business to raise, Secretary of Agriculture Wallace revealed in a report. This is an average of approximately $128,200 a producer, but far larger lumps of the New Deal "sugar" went to the large sugar producers.

Here are a few disclosed by Wallace in response to a senate request made at the vigorous insistence of Sen. Arthur H. Vandenberg (Rep., Mich.) that names of those who received more than $10,000 each be bared:

Hawaiian Commercial and Sugar Company, Ltd., $1,022,037; Oahu Sugar Company of Hawaii, $904,562; Lihue Plantation company, Hawaii, $815,409; Ewa Plantation company, Hawaii, $751,843; Waialua Agricultural Company, Ltd., Hawaii, $740,095

Bank Gets $705,488.

Even the National City Bank of New York apparently got paid by the AAA for not raising sugar, for it received $705,488 on the same contract by which the Eastern sugar associates of Puerto Rico received $278,810.

Largest sugar payments on the mainland went to the United States Sugar Corporation of Florida, which was paid $785,038.

Lee Wilson and Company, Mississippi county, Arkansas, received the largest cotton payments—$392,702, while the Delta and Pine Land company of Mississippi received $318,287. Oscar Johnston, manager of the AAA cotton pool, is the Delta manager.

Large Hog, Wheat Payments.

The largest hog payment went to Fantana Farms in California, $155,578.

Among the large wheat payments were $51,066 to the Campbell Farming Corporation of Montana; and a total of $134,834 to the Sutter Basin Corp., Ltd., and the Sutter Improvement Company of California.

Landon Takes First Vacation in 4 Years

Topeka, Kan.—When Gov. Alf M. Landon and his family left here for Estes Park, Colo., it was the start of the first vacation in four years for the Republican nominee for the presidency. He was to spend two weeks resting in preparation for the campaign and in writing the speech with which he will accept his formal notification of the nomination, in Topeka, July 23. In between he hoped to sandwich a little horseback riding, of which he is fond.

With the governor were Mrs. Landon and the three children, Peggy Anne, nineteen; Nancy Jo, three, and John Cobb, two, and Mrs Samuel E. Cobb, mother of Mrs Landon. In addition there were a few members of Governor Landon's staff

The governor was to return for the opening of the special session of the state legislature the second week in July, but Mrs. Landon is to remain until the notification ceremonies The children will stay all summer

1,814,000 Acres

In 1932 there was imported into the United States a total of 344,340 bushels of corn. In 1935, under the Roosevelt acreage reduction program, the importation of corn from foreign farms amounted to 43,242,239 bushels, the production of 1,814,000 acres.

The Poor Pay the Bill

Washington, D. C.—Despite the claims of loading most of the cost burden of the New Deal on the shoulders of the rich: Income taxes paid for 55 per cent of the government spending from 1928 to 1932; in the years since 1932 they have paid for only 26 per cent of it.

Butter and Egg Market

Twenty-three thousand people were denied the opportunity for self support because of the importation from foreign countries of 34,199,683 pounds of milk, butter and eggs during 1935. The tariff policies of the Roosevelt administration were responsible.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ludeke and son, Paul, of near Meservey, were Sunday dinner guests at the H. R. Gibbs home.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert Hippen and family entertained the following to dinner Sunday: Mr. and Mrs. Lew Neuberger and family, Mr and Mrs. Donald Neuberger and family Mr. and Mrs. Melvin Neuberger and Elaine, Clarence Lemke Wert Loger.

Mr. and Mrs. Art Schoenwetter Mr and Mrs. John Neuberger and family, Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Ludeke and family, Fred Schlichting and daughters, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ludeke and son of Meservey, Mr. and Mrs. George Schoenwetter and family had a gathering at the Will Ax home Sunday afternoon in honor of Mrs Elmer Weisbrod of Fenton, who visited here for a few days.

Bundle of Twigs Serves as Calendar for Indians

A quaint system of calendar-making, similar to that employed by the Bible Patriarchs, is practiced by the Sarcee Indians of the Indian reserve outside Calgary, Alberta. It is the medicine man's responsibility, notes a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine, to transfer each morning a twig from a bundle representing the unused part of the month to another bundle that represents the used part. Altogether, he has five bundles, each containing thirty twigs. The third bundle, signifying June in summer and December in winter, is always kept in two equal parts The divisions denote mid-summer's day in one instance and mid-winter's day in the other In winter the twigs are kept with their points downwards, in summer the position is reversed. Having only five bundles to tally off six months each half-year, the medicine man always uses the fifth bundle twice The picturesque names and emblems by which the Indians recognize the months run as follows:

April, Frog Moon, Bull Frog's Croak; May, Sprouting of Green Leaves and Grass; June, Egg (Duck's) Moon; July, Moulting (Duck's) Moon; August, Flying (Duck's) Moon; September, Running of the Deer; October, Fall of Leaves Moon; November, Misty Moon; December, Clear, Frosty Moon; January, Great Moon, February, Eagle Moon, eagles soar; March, Goose Moon, geese come.

Creation of Petroleum Antedates Animal Life

Oil is of inorganic origin, having been made by the interaction of certain elements inside the earth's crust while that body was aging into its present condition. Another theory is that it is of organic origin This latter is the most generally accepted and it has the bulk of evidence to support it even though most of it is circumstantial. According to this theory oil was formed through an unusual and gradual breaking up of vast amounts of organic matter Some of this organic matter was plant life but most of it was animal life and microscopic animal life at that.

Knowing the countless billions of gallons of petroleum that have been taken from the earth and knowing of the billions of gallons that still remain in the mighty subterranean reservoirs this might seem a bit incredible. But that is because we are unable to realize the extent of a million years or the number of animals that can live and die during that time.

The process which eventually led to the creation of petroleum started hundreds of millions of years before the first blade of grass grew or before the first bit of animal life moved about on dry land.—Pathfinder Magazine.

Species of Swans

Ornithologists seem to agree that there are but two species of swans native to the states; and both are pure white One is the whistling swan, the most common and often found in Great Lakes waters. The other is the trumpeter swan, a bird of the west which is almost extinct. The whooping swan, another great white bird, was formerly abundant north of the Arctic circle and in Greenland but this bird is considered extinct. The Australian black swan is much smaller than these three and is frequently confused with our common black brant. The black swan is found only in zoos and bird sanctuaries in this country, according to a writer in the Detroit News, and many persons when they observe them think they are black brant.

Artificial Diamonds

Artificial diamonds were made many years ago by a French chemist, Henri Moissan He got his idea when tiny diamonds were found in fragments of iron meteorites, according to a writer in Tit-Bits Magazine. Knowing diamonds were crystallized carbon he attempted to reproduce the conditions which had once existed in the meteorites. Dissolving carbon in molten iron he then suddenly cooled the mass. This caused the outside to harden first forming an outer shell which contracted and exerted a tremendous pressure on the inner substance. When the entire mass had cooled and hardened Moissan dissolved the iron away with hydrochloric acid and found that tiny diamonds had been formed from the carbon.

Movable Freezing Point

Water will freeze when inclosed in a vacuum; it will freeze at a point 1 1-100 of a degree higher than the ordinary freezing point. To freeze, water must expand By placing a great pressure upon it and limiting its expansion, it is possible to reduce the freezing point. Experimenters have kept it from freezing, by this method, until it was several degrees below the zero of the Fahrenheit scale. Correspondingly, by reducing the normal pressure on the water expansion is freer and the freezing point is raised. The atmosphere pressure being comparatively slight, the creation of a vacuum serves to raise the freezing point only a small fraction of a degree.

Perry's Cave

Perry's Den, or Perry's Cave, is located about three-fourths of a mile southeast of Put-In-Bay harbor, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. The floor of the cave is about 31 feet below the surface. The cave, which is electrically lighted, is oval shaped, the highest point being about nine feet above the floor. Only a few stalagmites are left in place.

President Returns From His Western Tour

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT returned to Washington from his tour through six western states and, though he was rather tired, he hoped to run up to New London, Conn., for the Yale-Harvard boat race. That depended on the congressional situation. He had to deal with the lawmakers who were all tangled up in the controversy over the tax bill, and also to complete his speech of acceptance to be delivered at Philadelphia on June 27.

President Roosevelt

The final speech of Mr. Roosevelt's trip was delivered at Vincennes, Ind., where he dedicated the handsome memorial to George Rogers Clark. He paid eloquent tribute to that conqueror of the Northwest, and found occasion to appeal for support of his own program. Said he:

"In his (Clark's) day among the pioneers there were jumpers of land claims and those who sought to swindle their neighbors though they were poor in this world's goods and lived in sparsely settled communities. Today among our teeming millions there still are those who by dishonorable means seek to obtain the possessions of their unwary neighbors.

"Our modern civilization must constantly protect itself against moral defectives whose objectives are the same but whose methods are more subtle than their prototypes of a century and a half ago. We do not change our form of free government when we arm ourselves with new weapons against new devices of crime and cupidity."

In a series of rhetorical questions the President defended the AAA subsidies to farmers, soil conservation, reforestation, and preservation of wild life.

From Vincennes Mr. Roosevelt went to Hodgenville, Ky., for a brief visit to Lincoln's birthplace, and then his train carried him back to Washington.

Senator Norris Again Will Support Roosevelt

FOUR years ago Senator George Norris of Nebraska, independent Republican, warmly supported Franklin D. Roosevelt for the Presidency, and he now announces that he will again back the Democratic ticket. He urges his countrymen "to forget partisanship and come to the support of the man who more than any other man in recent years has stood for the welfare of the common people."

The senator said the Cleveland convention "nominated a man for President whose greatest asset is that nobody knows him and nobody knows what he stands for. It does not necessarily follow from this that the nominee is not a good man. But it does mean that if he will not take orders from the undisclosed bosses who made him, then these eminent gentlemen have been deceived."

Landon and Knox Are Named by Republicans

IN ONE of the greatest demonstrations of popular acclaim in the history of American politics, Gov. Alfred M. Landon was nominated for President of the United States by the Republican national convention meeting in Cleveland.

Gov. Landon

Nominated on the first ballot, Governor Landon received the unprecedented number of 984 out of a possible 1,003 votes. The nomination was made unanimous. Although his name had not been placed in nomination, Senator William E. Borah of Idaho received 19 votes, including 18 from the Wisconsin delegation and one from West Virginia.

Col. Frank Knox of Chicago, publisher of the Chicago Daily News, was nominated unanimously for Vice President on the ticket Party unity and harmony were the watchwords of the delegates. The action of the three other leading candidates for the Presidential nomination—Col Frank Knox of Chicago, Senator Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan and Senator Borah—in withdrawing in Landon's favor paved the way for a militant and united front in the coming campaign by the Republican party.

The convention adopted a platform of "Americanism," pledging a broad farm relief program, repeal of reciprocal tariff bargaining, the elimination of monopolies and opposition to American entry into the League of Nations and the World court.

Governor Landon in a telegram read to the convention by his campaign manager, John Hamilton, placed his own interpretation on certain planks in the platform. Under the title of labor he advocated a Constitutional amendment permitting the states to adopt legislation necessary to protect women and children in the matter of maximum hours, minimum wages and working conditions, provided it is not possible to do so under the Constitution as it now stands.

He likewise advocated a currency expressed in terms of gold and convertible into gold, adding: "I recognize, however, that this requisite must not be made until and unless it can be done without penalizing our domestic economy and without injury to our producers of agricultural products and other raw materials."

Concerning the merit system in civil service, he suggested that it should include every position in the administrative service below the rank of assistant secretaries of major departments and should cover the entire Post Office department.

Russia to Become Only "Real Democracy"

RUSSIA proposes to establish what its rulers assert will be the only real democracy in the world. A new constitution, to be promulgated next fall, has been drawn up under the direction of Josef Stalin, the dictator, and will be acted on by the all-union congress of soviets on November 25. This document guarantees protection for private property, suffrage for all citizens more than eighteen years old, regardless of race, sex, religious belief, and previous activities or property ownership. The communist party will be retained as the only recognized political organization.

There are to be two legislative bodies, the council of the union, elected by the people, and the council of nationalities, selected by the present indirect system. These two bodies will elect a board of 31 officials to run the government. The chairman of this board will be equivalent to the president of a republic.

The official press in Moscow says bourgeois democracy is a "dictatorship of capitalism," whereas the Soviet democracy will grant the widest rights to all working people, the "old, exploiting classes" having disappeared over there.

Eastman Offers Program of Railway Reform

JUST as his office was about to expire, Joseph B. Eastman, federal coordinator of transportation, submitted a report in which he proposed a lot of reforms by which the railroads might win back the business they have lost to the truck and the automobile. Among his suggestions are lower fares, lighter weight, and speedier cars, use of busses and trucks by the railroads to meet competition and consolidation of terminals and other facilities.

J. B. Eastman

He also advised the development of a nation-wide "container" service in the movement of freight by railway, highway and water, predicting that this would save millions of dollars in the handling of present freight and would create much new business. The containers are now used in a limited manner in some localities and industries.

Eastman recommended a "searching examination and thorough overhauling" of railroad pullman service, and a plan of operation under which the Pullman company would own and operate the cars and railroads, leasing them and retaining the entire revenue from the sleeping and parlor car service.

Pershing Says Outlook for Peace Is Not Bright

GEN. JOHN J. PERSHING is not optimistic concerning world peace. Addressing the graduating class at the United States Military academy on the fiftieth anniversary of his own graduation the general said "no one can tell when we shall again need our armies." He continued: "The situation in the world today is far from reassuring. None can foresee the effect upon us of another world catastrophe. Loyal citizens cannot shut their eyes to the possibility of war. They owe it to all that is sacred to make ample preparation against an evil day."

The 276 cadets of the 1936 class go on three months' leave before reporting to their first stations as second lieutenants.

Death of G. K. Chesterton, Noted English Author

ONE of England's most distinguished and interesting authors and critics passed from the scene in the death of Gilbert Keith Chesterton, generally known as "G. K." He was sixty-two years old. Chesterton was converted to Catholicism in 1922 and thereafter much of his writing was devoted to his championship of that church. For many years his writings were very popular and in 1926 he established his own weekly magazine. He was the author of about 50 books and innumerable articles.

Chesterton loved to write something incongruous and was called "prince of paradoxes." Combative, unconventional, and dogmatic, his was a distinctive style. His outspoken criticisms in addresses and writings frequently led to controversies.

Farm Mortgage Body Shows Good Profits

ANNOUNCEMENT by the Federal Farm Mortgage corporation shows that its net profits from its organization to March 31 last were $15,280,716. This sum has been set aside as a reserve against mortgage loan losses.

The profit and loss statement of the corporation, published in the first issue of the Farm Credit Quarterly, shows that the organization held, as of March 31, first mortgages on farm real estate amounting to approximately $308,000,000, second mortgages valued at $510,000,000, and consolidated federal farm loan bonds bought from the federal land banks amounting to about $759,600,000. Outstanding bonds of the corporation on March 31 totaled $1,047,256,900.

John Hays Hammond Is Taken by Death

DEATH came to John Hays Hammond, eighty-one, internationally-famed mining engineer, economist and writer, at his home at Gloucester, Mass. He had lived a life high in adventure and rich in experiences. He was a friend and confidant of Theodore Roosevelt Mark Twain, H. Rider Haggard, Cecil Rhodes and many other figures c-e-l-e-b-r-a-t-e-d in world history in the past half century.

John Hays Hamond

Mr. Hammond was born in San Francisco, California, in 1855 where his parents settled after the Mexican war in which his father served as a major. It was the era of the spectacular California gold rush. He watched miners pan for gold dust as a boy. After graduation from Yale he set himself up as a mining engineer. Soon he visited the West coast of Mexico.

He became known as an expert judge of mining property and was sent to South Africa by "Barney" Barnato, great speculator of the last century. Hammond experienced some romantic adventures including an acrimonious encounter with Paul Kruger, president of the Transvaal republic who sentenced him to be hanged and relented only on the intervention of the secretary of state.

After developing mining property in many parts of the world, Mr. Hammond was appointed by President Taft in 1911 as special ambassador and personal representative at the coronation of King George V.

Two New Cardinals Are Appointed by the Pope

IN A secret consistory Pope Pius XI raised to the rank of cardinal two of his old friends, Giovanni Mercati and Eugenio Tisserant. Twenty-seven cardinals were present at the ceremony, among them being Cardinal Dougherty of Philadelphia.

During the consistory the pope formally proclaimed appointments of three American and two Canadian bishops. They were Msgr. George L. Leech, bishop of Harrisburg, Pa.; Msgr. Hugh L. Lamb, auxiliary bishop to Cardinal Dougherty, Msgr. William Adrian, Nashville, Tenn.; Msgr. Francis Carrol, Calgary, Alta, and Msgr. Patrick Bray, St. John.

Strikes Still Annoy New Regime in France

AFTER settling a general strike in which 1,000,000 workers had paralyzed the industrial life of France, the new "popular front" government under Premier Leon Blum was faced with further difficulties in the form of a series of new strikes. Although the government had toiled day and night trying to adjust disputes and though most of the demands of strikers had been satisfied by employers, there was a smaller return to work than had been expected It was reported that as fast as strikes in some industries were settled, others were affected.

The extent of the permanent ravages which will be left in the wake of this upheaval will only become apparent later on. Some observers predicted that private industry would be forced into bankruptcy so as to secure operation by the state. But whether Premier Blum and his "popular front" government were prepared for such extreme measures was not at all certain.

Mussolini Gives Up Three of His Cabinet Jobs

IN A long expected cabinet shake-up in Italy, Premier Mussolini gave out three of his eight portfolios. There are 15 posts in the cabinet. Il Duce appointed his son-in-law, Count Galeazzo Ciano, as foreign minister. Ciano, only thirty-three, is the world's youngest foreign minister. He moved up from the cabinet post of propaganda. Mussolini also gave up the ministries of colonies and corporations. these posts going respectively to Ferruccia Lantini and Alesandro Lessona Count Ciano's former ministry was taken by Dlono Alfieri. Giuseppe Bastianini, ambassador to Poland, was made undersecretary for foreign affairs. He is only thirty-seven.

Mussolini

Elsewhere in the world governments were experiencing changes. In Nicaragua, Dr. Charles Brenes Jaquin, completing the unexpired term of the deposed President, Dr Juan B Sacasa, announced his cabinet.

In Madrid, the Spanish government crushed what was described as a rightist conspiracy to seize control of the government.

"The Bridge That Wasn't There"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

WELL, give a good look at this one, boys and girls, from Dr. Alexander E. Strath-Gordon of East Orange, N. J. If you ever read this yarn he is going to tell you, in a novel, you wouldn't believe it could happen. If your own brother told it to you, you'd tell him he was just plain goofy.

Doc Strath-Gordon thought he was cracked himself when he found out what had happened. And the people he told his story to thought he was crazy, too—for a while. But here are the simple facts, all checked and attested and sworn to. You can't get around the truth of the thing.

You can't say it was a dream, because a bridge is a big, heavy, solid object. If it's there, it's there, and if it ain't, it ain't. You can't dream it out of place and then back again.

All of which leads up to Doc's story. The date is August, 1909, and the place is—well—somewhere on the road between Seattle, Wash., and Duwamish Head on the other side of Elliot bay. Doc was practicing medicine in Seattle and he had received a hurry call from a patient in Duwamish Head.

Patient's Husband Thinks Doc Flew to Sick Room.

He started out in his car, and you know what those 1909 vintage automobiles were like. To make matters worse, the dirt roads of the time were wet from a week's steady rain. Parts of them were flooded. But a patient had called him, and even though he was twenty miles away, it was up to Doc to get to him if he possibly could.

The night was pitch dark. The roads were unlighted, and the flickering kerosene headlamps that rattled on the sides of Doc's horseless carriage didn't throw any light on the road at all. There were two ways to get to Duwamish Head and Doc took the shorter. It took him an hour and a half to cover that twenty miles, but when he got there, his patient's husband said: "Good gosh, but you made that trip fast. How did you manage to get here so quickly?"

Well, sir, Doc thought that was funny, but he didn't say anything then. His patient was waiting, and he was needed in the sick room. He worked over her for half an hour until she was out of danger, and then he went out to assure her husband that everything was all right.

Doc Hears He Crossed Bridge That Was Out.

He sat down for a few moments' rest before starting on the return trip, and again his patient's husband brought up the subject of the quickness with which he had arrived.

"How the dickens did you come here, anyway, Doctor?" he asked. "Did you fly?"

"Why, I came by the Bay Side road, of course," said Doc.

The man looked at Doc sort of curiously. "You couldn't have," he said bluntly. "The bridge is out."

Doc thought he was joking, and tried to laugh it off. But the man insisted the bridge was being repaired—that the planking was all off and it was unpassable. He told Doc that the only available route to his house was the upper road, a 28-mile trip.

He began to urge Doc to stay all night, and at last Doc saw he was serious. Then it occurred to Doc that the man must have gone insane, or become unnerved by his wife's illness.

Daylight Reveals That Bridge Wasn't There.

Says Doc: "I decided to stay with him, partly to humor an overwrought man, and partly because I didn't think it safe to leave his sick wife alone with one in such condition. I spent the night at his house, and in the morning he brought the subject up again at breakfast. He said: 'Now Doc, let's both go down and look at that bridge before you go back to town.'"

There was something in that fellow's manner that reminded Doc of a sane man humoring a sick one. It occurred to him then that this bird thought he was the crazy one. But he agreed to go down and look over the bridge, which was only a mile away from the house. They got into Doc's car and drove the short distance down the road. They got in sight of the bridge, and then—

"Imagine my surprise—even horror," says Doc, "when I saw that bridge in broad daylight. All that he had told me was true! There was nothing left of the bridge but the gaunt string pieces—two of them—running from one side of the river to the other.

Strath-Gordon Had Piloted Car Over Fingers of Death.

"The planking—the rails—the superstructure, all had been taken away. And yet, I had come across that bridge in the darkness of the night. I knew that I wasn't crazy. And yet, for a moment, I began to think that I was losing my mind.

"The string pieces were the answer. They were less than a foot wide, each, but they were separated by the same width as the wheels of my automobile. I had driven across them in the dark, like an acrobat on a tight wire. My heart came into my throat when I thought of what might have happened.

All the local people knew that the bridge was impassable, so no warning sign had been posted. I, not knowing this, and having crossed it so many times before, drove over it automatically. The only way I can explain the miracle is that, having a surgeon's hand, I drove with the same steadiness with which I performed operations. Had I deviated an inch from the straight path over that bridge, I would have fallen into deep water—and I might not have attended my patient."

History of the Fan Is as Old as Civilization

Ever since the vestal virgins used fans to encourage sacrificial fires, women have prized these time-honored implements of coquetry, states a writer in the Kansas City Star. Cupid, according to mythology, tore a wing from Zephyr's shoulder when he was flirting with Psyche and presented it to her to prove he was the better man.

"Helen of Troy," Euripides wrote, "knew when she suffered from summer heat how to cool her cheeks, fresh and velvety as a ripe peach, by the use of a peacock's tail arranged fan-wise."

Queen Elizabeth loved fans and her subjects vied with one another in giving them to her. It is said she had 27 in her wardrobe when she died. Shakespeare demanded a wing of painted butterfly to waft over the sleeping Titania.

The history of the fan is as old as civilization. In the beginning it probably was a palm leaf or a bird wing used for winnowing grain, fanning fires or brushing flies. The first record of a fan, it is said, appears in the annals of the Chow dynasty, 1052-1101 B. C. The emperor received as tribute two magnificent tropical birds. The birds not surviving, the feathers were made into fans. Ancient sculpture shows attendants waving fans.

Fans were first used by men, but women soon discovered their artistic possibilities and quickly appropriated them. When an emperor went to war two fans were nailed upright on his chariot as standards. The empress carried a fan to dust the chariot wheels lest her robes become soiled.

Face Clear Again with Cuticura Soap and Ointment

Here is a letter every skin sufferer should read. Its message is vital. "There were blemishes on my face ... of external origin, and they made me look old and haggard. They were red, hard and large. They would hurt, and when I scratched them the skin would become irritated, and I would lie awake at night and start digging at my face.

"But after using two cakes of Cuticura Soap and one tin of Cuticura Ointment my face was cleared again." (Signed) Mrs. L. Whetzler, 2nd St., Floreffe, Pa., June 15, 1935.

Physicians can understand such letters. The Cuticura formulas have proved their effectiveness for over half a century. Remember, Cuticura Soap and Ointment are also for pimples, rashes, ringworm, burning of eczema and other externally caused skin blemishes. All druggists. Soap 25c. Ointment 25c.—Adv.

Rid Yourself of Kidney Poisons

DO you suffer burning, scanty or too frequent urination; backache, headache, dizziness, loss of energy, leg pains, swellings and puffiness under the eyes? Are you tired, nervous—feel all unstrung and don't know what is wrong?

Then give some thought to your kidneys. Be sure they function properly for functional kidney disorder permits excess waste to stay in the blood, and to poison and upset the whole system.

Use Doan's Pills. Doan's are for the kidneys only. They are recommended the world over. You can get the genuine, time-tested Doan's at any drug store.

us, there is every evidence of a d type of politics in this investi- gation. The evi- ond Type dence of politics lay Politics in the fact that the House voted the in- y largely because many of the idual House members were d, they were too cowardly, to take hite stand in their home dis- against the Townsendites. True, did not know how strong the nsend movement was. So, as poli- ns always do, they dodged the is- sue and moved to expose it through the medium of a House investigation rather than fight individually to show how ridiculous, how unsound, the plan was.

Having set up the picture showing an utterly impossible program on the part of Dr. Townsend and his associates and followers, the House politicians were confronted suddenly by Dr. Townsend's arrogance in his refusal to testify. That presented a sudden change in the scenery. To explain the dangers in this new problem, it is only necessary to say that if the House had acted promptly by voting that Dr. Townsend was in contempt and must spend some time in jail, I expect the result would have been martyrdom for Dr. Townsend. Martyrdom is always bad from a political standpoint if the opposition has the martyr.

The house, therefore, has turned over the affair to the courts and the courts, being slow moving as they always are, will not get around to prosecution of the case until it is too late to have any influence on the election. So we can see readily that Dr. Townsend is left out in the cold. He can neither use the influence that is characteristic of martyrdom nor can he say that his skirts are clear. The house has left him hanging conveniently in mid-air and it was done solely for political reasons.

There may be some more hearings on the Townsend plan during the summer but the chances are that Representative Bell will not call the committee together again for some months. Practically, the case is closed It has undoubtedly stopped to a large measure the drain that the Townsend organization was making on the unthinking, the aged and the destitute whose quarters, dimes and nickels have financed the thing thus far. While the committee did a good job by exposing the character of the scheme. I still am doubtful that it has brought to itself or to the house of representatives any fresh confidence in our governmental structure.

The national capital, along with many other sections of the country, has been listening to the purring of hordes of "locusts." I use the word locusts in quotation marks because they are not really locusts. They are cicadas but to the most of us they are and will remain the seventeen-year locusts.

17-Year Locusts

It is said that the first colonists in America, never before having met with the insects and believing that everything of God's creation was accounted for in the Bible, concluded they were locusts and the name has stuck. In any event, they appear in greatest numbers at seventeen-year intervals and 1936 seems to be a banner year.

Back in 1919, trees in many sections of the country were pierced by tiny saw-like instruments which the Department of Agriculture says are part of the equipment of the female cicadas. Billions of eggs were deposited under the soft bark. A month or two later, grubs emerged on the branches and dropped unnoticed to the earth.

Then, the chronology of the life of these cicadas becomes a matter of darkness for seventeen long years. The insect in grub form burrowed itself in the soil and subsisted on the juices of roots. As far as anyone knows they did little or no harm but after sixteen years and a few months of this life, the grubs awoke this spring and out they came. They acted on instinct, of course.

Through the last several weeks these great beetle-like bugs with wings like isinglass have been humming and thrumming and leaving their empty shells attached to trees and grasses.

During that period, the males have spent their daylight hours singing. The Department of Agriculture is not quite sure why this singing has gone on because it has ascertained that all of the lady cicadas are quite deaf.

Perhaps I have devoted too much space to the story of the seventeen-year locust. Perhaps the seventeen-year locust is not important at all except to the robins and the starlings and the sparrows and the other birds which have had a feast in 1936 that almost no other bird now living has known. But I have a thought about these seventeen-year locusts, a train of thoughts, in fact. They lead to this:

What will conditions be in 1953, or seventeen years hence when those humans on earth will hear again the mating song of the locusts?

Will the policies and the principles initiated by Franklin D. Roosevelt and called "the New Deal" be firmly imbedded as American traditions or will they be cast out as impractical and forgotten? Will the changes in civilization be such that people will be willing to submit to regimentation, to have their government tell them what to do and how to do it, or will this nation be a nation of individuals who insist upon the rights and the privileges which the founders of our country believed to be just and right?

One Big Shot Convicted
The Many Laugh
Roman Triumph, New Style
Storms, Floods, Twisters

The kind of "justice" supposed to "terrify" crime in this country is very amusing justice: confined to the national government. Murderers, kidnapers and other racketeers are jailed, not for their crimes against society, but for failure to pay income tax. The felon is jailed for failure to divide his criminal earnings with his government.

Arthur Brisbane

A change from this program is due to Special Prosecutor Dewey, who, before Supreme Court Justice McCook, in New York city, has convicted a "topnotch racketeer," as Mr Dewey calls him—Charles ("Lucky") Luciano. He and eight vice-ring associates are convicted on 62 counts, that may entail prison sentences of 1,240 years for "Lucky" and each associate.

This is an actual conviction for crime, not for taxdodging.

In this world, many laugh and a few do things. Fulton said he would run a boat up the Hudson river by steam; crowds gathered to laugh.

When it was suggested early in this century that men would soon fly, successfully, millions laughed.

Had it been suggested that an army officer would cross the continent "flying blind" in a hooded cabin, seeing nothing, guided by a scientific "radio beam," the laughs would have been louder; but that is what Major Eaker, of the army air corps, has just done. If you should say now that giant ships will fly around this earth, up in the stratosphere, above clouds and storms, carrying thousands of passengers, dropping them at their various destinations in smaller ships, "around the world in 48 hours or less," there would be more laughter but it would be foolish laughter. What men can imagine they can do, and more.

General Badoglio, who was sent by Mussolini to take over Ethiopia, and did so, celebrated his triumph in Rome, Mussolini and the Italian king, now emperor of Ethiopia, assisting.

The triumphant general, named viceroy of Ethiopia by Mussolini, who surprised the world with the swiftness of his conquest, led his troops, burned by the tropical sun, under the victory arch of Constantine to the tomb of the unknown soldier of the big war.

"Storms kill nine in Oklahoma and Kansas; tornadoes, floods and lightning cause havoc," so runs the headline, and so other headlines have been running for months past. Hail ruins crops; lightning bolts kill three; "twisters," those powerful, revolving windstorms, lift up and knock down little houses.

The sultan of Sulu is dead on the Island of Jolo, now only sultan in name.

Once, as spiritual and temporal head, he ruled all the Mohammedans of the Sulu archipelago.

The death of this former ruler, Jamalul Kiram, recalls an interesting incident following the Spanish war. Jamalul, good Mohammedan, did not think he should deal with this nation, on account of its religion. He was soothed by an official statement that the United States had no official religion whatever.

The Black Legion, latest secret murder organization, tells candidates: "You cannot join unless you are a native-born, white, Protestant gentile; willing to proceed against negroes, Catholics and Jews." To "proceed against" means to murder.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, a Protestant organization, says it is shameful for the Black Legion to use the word "Protestant," and blasphemous to use the name "God Almighty."

Sir Samuel Hoare had to leave the British cabinet because he opposed the foolishness of sending a great British fleet into the Mediterranean to protect Halle Selassie, not protecting him in the least.

Now, Sir Samuel Hoare is back in the British cabinet, "the king pleased to appoint him." This means, probably, that the futile League of Nations' "sanctions" effort to coerce Mussolini will be dropped. Many things are easier than coercing Mussolini.

Why do Americans swallow eagerly anything in the way of foreign-made goods, especially if they come from the friendly British islands?

British merchants advertise proudly "Made in Great Britain." Every Englishman urges "Buy British." Americans seem proud if they can advertise "Made in England" or "Made in France." Perhaps our goods are inferior but every American makes his money here—why not back our own people?

More killing, bombing, shooting in Palestine, Arabs refusing to discontinue strikes and killings, even at the request of their own leaders.

IT'S TIME TO PLAN SEASON'S CANNING; VARIOUS METHODS

With Mother Nature bursting into bloom, filling the earth with warm sunshine and growing vegetation, we know it is time to plan the season's canning and give some thought to canning methods.

"Open kettle" canning is recommended only for fruits, tomatoes, preserves, relishes, etc., and only one jar must be filled at a time with the boiling product, and then sealed immediately. The "hot" or "cold pack" method simply means that the product is cooked directly in the jars For "hot pack" food is precooked a short period of time and then packed hot into the jars. For "cold pack" food is pre-cooked, then cold-dipped and packed into jars, or packed right in the jars cold without precooking.

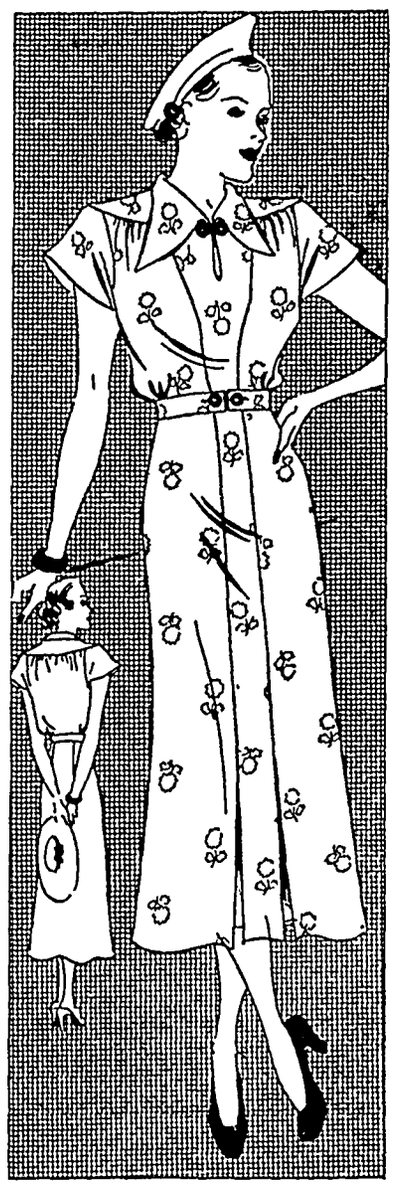
The product for canning should be carefully selected and thoroughly cleansed Small fruits and berries are usually packed into the jars raw, a hot sirup added to within one and one-half inches of the top, caps adjusted, and the jars processed. Vegetables are precooked for a few minutes and packed into the jars while hot, the caps adjusted and the filled jars gotten into the canner immediately for processing.

It is also important to know how to handle the type of jar cap that you are using correctly. For the self-sealing cap, which consists of screw band and lid, place lid on the jar with sealing composition next to the glass, and screw the band firmly tight. Because this cap does not seal until the contents of the jar are cold, the self sealing cap is always tightened down firmly before the jars are placed in the canner to process. At the end of the processing period the jars with the selfsealing caps are removed from the canner and set right side up to cool. There is no further tightening of the cap. Twenty-four hours after the canning is done the screw band may be removed and jars stored away.

When using the zinc top jars, jars are only partly sealed before placing in the cooker, and processed immediately. At the end of processing time, remove from the cooker, one at a time, and seal immediately. When jars are cold, invert for two or three hours, then examine for leaks.

For the glass-top jars which covers are held in place with a wire bail, these too are only partially sealed before processing, the seal being completed at the end of processing period by bringing the lower part of the wire bail down in place.

Who Wouldn't Be Slim and Trim in This Stunning Summer Frock?



Who isn't excited about the new wider shoulder width that tends to slenderize the waistline?

Note the unusual bodice lines, the panel extending to the hem, and kick pleats that contribute dash and ease. The natty collar is just right to take a pin, clip or posy. The frock is quickly fashioned and costs so little to make.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1889-B is available in sizes 14, 16, 18, 20; 40 and 42. Corresponding bust measurements 32, 34, 36, 38, 40 and 42. Size 18 requires 4⅞ yards of 39-inch material. Send fifteen cents in coin for the pattern.

The Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns is ready. Send 15 cents in coin for your copy.

OF INTEREST TO THE HOUSEWIFE

Wash out chamois skins on a windy day. Hang up to dry on the clothesline and the wind will blow the skins so they will be very soft when dry.

Try this method of watering hybrid tea roses all during the summer. With a can opener remove both ends from a tin can, then sink can, one open end down, into the ground. Turn hose into cans and occasionally liquid manure.

When mulching perennials avoid using too heavy a mulch. The purpose of the mulch is to keep the plants cool, not warm.

Coral beads may be cleaned by dissolving a teaspoonful of borax in a pint of warm water. Dip the coral, and when clean, put through tepid water.

The color of spinach will be preserved if a pinch of soda is added to the water in which it is boiled.

A strong solution of borax and water boiled in the coffee pot occasionally will keep it sweet.

Mushrooms added to brown gravy served with a roast give it a delicious flavor.

Dry the outside of ice trays after filling with water and before putting back into a mechanical refrigerator. If this is done trays will not stick and may be easily removed.

ACT 1 SCENE
Paul Arthur

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly . . . try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. ### SIGHT-SEEING IOWA

One does not need to leave the State of Iowa to enjoy the most scenic, historical, geological, botanical and interesting sights Iowa, commonly known as a prairie state possesses more than its share of interesting nature It has a wealth of varied interests, many of which are unknown to those who have accepted the term "prairie state" as the basis on which to form a mental picture of the state One can spend an entire vacation within the state's borders and then not see all there is to see and enjoy

In the northeast corner are the rock formations, wooded hills and valleys with many springs, streams and ice caves, in the northwest the lake region, that great cluster of beautiful waters surrounded by many resorts, playgrounds and good fishing Southwest and along that famous Missouri River are sights not to be seen anywhere else in the world—the sand, the hills, and the flyway of thousands upon thousands of migratory waterfowl Southeast Iowa presents an entirely different picture and with its rolling, brushy land, thousands of acres of forests, walnut, hickory and oak trees, the area is known to game concious men as an ideal quail territory

Central Iowa has given its share of interesting sights to the public and several areas have been set aside for state parks. Included is the Ledges State Park located six miles south of Boone on Highway 164 An area of 684 acres along the Des Moines River consisting of hills, flat land and sandstone ledges it is enjoyed by many, and ranked fourth in attendance during 1935 The only zoo in Iowa state parks is to be found here and it contains animals native to Iowa

Picnic areas, lodges, shelters and numerous recreational facilities and equipment provide for all a pleasant and interesting day in an area as nature intended

YOUNG BIRDS EASY TARGETS

With air rifles and sling shots mixed with school vacations, young are suffering a serious decrease in numbers in many sections of the state, according to reports.

The Conservation Commission appeals to parents of boys who have been killing young birds to stop the practice Both Federal and State laws prohibit the killing of most song birds and the penalty is the same as in cases of game birds. Conservation officers have been instructed to enforce the law due to numerous reports of such killing.

E. A. Stowater of Washington, D C., saved his life when fire broke out recently in his fourth-floor apartment. He slid down the rope that he had kept under his bed for 34 years for use in case of fire

Sampire, 14-year old Zulu dwarf is said to be the smallest person in the world. He is only 20 inches tall and three-fourths of a yard of cloth will make him a three-piece suit.

Traffic violators of Huntington, Ind., have a "scarlet letter" pasted on their windshield—to remain their 30 days—and to remove it means a jail sentence.

CONTINUE GRASSHOPPER BATTLE IN 23 COUNTIES

Farmers in 23 western and southwestern counties of Iowa this week were continuing their battle to bring the grasshoppers under control by means of poisoned bait.

To date, over 80 carloads of bran have been used in mixing poisoned bait. Seventy additional cars have been shipped into the state for this purpose

Three species of grasshopper are responsible for most of the damage the lesser migratory locust being the most important The other two species now causing trouble in Iowa are the two-striped grasshopper and differentia grasshopper

Mixing stations for preparing the 'hopper bait have been established in many of the infested counties, bait being issued to each farmer in quantities based on his immediate need and crop acreage

NORTH IOWA WEATHER IS HOTTEST IS THE PAST QUARTER OF CENTURY

Sunday High Was 110 Degrees In Klemme; Higher In Other Sections

Weather in North Iowa can go from one extreme to the other and 1936 seems to be a record breaker In February Iowa experienced the coldest weather in 176 years

Sunday the thermometer at Des Moines set the highest record for heat on July 5th in the past 57 years of the weather bureau's records

Mason City has kept accurate records for 26 years and their high mark of 109 degrees was the very highest ever recorded there Temperatures around Klemme ranged to the 110 mark

ORPHAN HOME BAND WILL GIVE CONCERT SUNDAY

Reformed Morning Service Hour Will Be Given Over To Visitors

The band from the Orphans Home at Fort Wayne Indiana will give a musical program at the Klemme Reformed Church Sunday morning, July 12th at 10 00 o'clock the regular morning service hour

This is a noted organization and they will present a program that will please all An offering will be taken for the Orphans Home

Rev A. Steinecker, supt of the Home, will give a talk that should be of interest to all

FREE TALKING PICTURES ARE SPECIAL FOR KLEMME ONLY

Orr Using Hand Labor On Most Of The Work

RAIN IS NEEDED

Farmers that have been interviewed seem to be of the opinion that the corn can stand only about ten days of blistering heat. Rain is needed and good soaking showers would be of great benefit to pastures and hay land

The Iowa Weather Bureau does not predict rain until the latter part of the week, and is even at doubt that rain will fall until later

ELL TOWN PICNIC WILL BE HELD THIS SATURDAY

Children Will Give Program In Morning; Band Concert in P. M.

The annual Ell Town Reformed Church Sunday School picnic will be held this week Saturday.

The children will give their program in the morning beginning at 1$ 00 o'cock and the big picnic dinner will be served at noon

In the afternoon the Orphans Home Band from Fort Wayne will entertain with a concert.

ROOF ON FILLING STATION RAISED TO CLEAR TRUCKS

The roof on the Hancock County Oil station was raised eighteen inches last week so that trucks will be able to drive safely under without danger of further damage to the roof.

The roof was a few inches low for some trucks and the roof edge was damaged several times by the top box boards of the truck scraping along the roof.

The remodeling job also improves the appearance of the station.

CRYSTAL FREE JELLY

"Too much sugar" say extension nutritionists is the cause for many of the gritty sugar crystals in jelly

Sometimes crystals will form on the surface if jelly is allowed to stand too long before it is sealed Lack of sufficient acid in the fruit is another possible cause Slightly underripe fruits contain more acid and pectin than ripe fruits and are the best "jelliers" Ripe fruit however, has the best flavor and color, and a combination of juices from ripe and slightly unripe fruit is most successful.

Lawrence Thompson, an Indiana farmer, is an obliging soul. One night recently two men awakened him and asked his aid in rounding up some hogs which they said had escaped when their truck broke down Thompson gladly helped the men, but when he checked up the next morning he found that he had assisted the strangers to steal his own hogs.

Most Of Labor Is Being Done By Hand Instead Of Machinery

Bruce Orr, Garner, who was awarded the Main Street paving in Klemme, had a force of men on hand Monday morning and began the job of excavating for the concrete clab.

Most of the work is done by hand labor and although it is not as rapid as machine work, Mr Orr says the final results will be the same. A section of excavating will be completed, then the steel laid and the concrete poured, when another section will be made ready and the process repeated

Forty-five days time is allowed in the contract for completing the job and Mr Orr states that he expects to complete the task well within the time limit.

FARMERS STILL HAVE TIME FOR SOIL BUILDING PRACTICE

Iowa farmers who have not yet adopted practices to conserve soil and its fertility under the 1936 farm program still have opportunity to take part this year, says S J. Oberhauser, county agent.

Work sheets have been made out for practically every farm and participation in the program now depends on the individual adopting soil practices which qualify for payment.

Many farmers already have adopted some practices that will qualify them for payments. These practices include diversion made from corn, wheat and other soil-depleting crops to soil-conserving crops or uses. Other farmers are following approved practices for improving pastures or controlling weeds Many additional opportunities, however, are available for performance he points out.

During July Hancock County farmers still have the opportunity to put in new seeding of alfalfa Soybeans may be plowed under to restore the fertility of low producing land Still other farmers may qualify for Class II payments by applying tons of limestone per acre on pastures or cropland that are in need of such treatment. Total payments, of course, are limited by the original provisions of the program.

Mr Greiman, County chairman, urges farmers who are not acquainted with the approved practices which they can adopt this year and receive payment, to consult their local committeemen or their county agent

He also suggests that farmers keep a receipted bill for legume and grass seed or limestone as a proof of their purchase. Proof of performance on crops and practices earning class II payments can be certified by a township committeeman or two disinterested neighbors The farmer must show proof that seed or lime was bought and give other required information.

Riot-Proof Prison Will Keep Felons Safely Behind Bars

Newly Granted Patent Has Scores of Innovations

WASHINGTON.—A riot-proof, escape-proof prison has just been granted a U. S. patent here. Novel construction permits guards to "listen in" through microphones on the whispered mutters of prisoners.

Tear gas bombs can be hurled by the keepers through openings so designed that possible revolver bullets cannot strike the keepers. Or, the ventilating system of the prison can pour forth tear gas if needed.

All these are claims of patent No. 2,036,515, issued to R. L. Clark of Rochester, N. Y.

Observation Gallery.

Main feature of the invention is a hanging observation gallery which runs the full length of the proposed prison between rows of cells. Made of bullet-proof steel and glass, an accompanying observation tower is also designed to be gas-proof.

In it the guards would stand watch. Lookout openings of bullet-proof glass protected by louvre slats are built in the sides and floor of the corridor. Through these "one-way" windows guards would secretly keep an eye on the prisoners.

There would also be special openings through which guards could hurl tear gas bombs; novel doors which when opened would act as shields to prevent any prisoners' bullets from hitting the guard while he was hurling a bomb.

Port Holes for Guards.

Port holes through which the guards would aim their guns are large steel balls with a hole in the center just big enough for the barrel of a rifle or revolver to pass through. The steel balls have universal movement in the wall of the corridor so that pistols or rifles poked through them can be aimed in any direction. There is no space through which a chance bullet could enter the port hole.

Fitted in the bullet-proof walls of the gallery would be microphones, protected against bullets and tampering. Placing his ear against any of these "ears," the guard would pick up unusual sounds and conversations of the prisoners.

Antidote for Monoxide Poisoning Is Promised

KANSAS CITY, MO.—What is claimed to be a marked advance in the search for an antidote for carbon monoxide poisoning was reported to the American Chemical society here by Drs. Samuel and Joseph Selfter of the University of Oklahoma Medical school.

In studies on rats, Doctor Selfter found, an injection of the compound known as hexahydroferric chloride resulted in 75 per cent recovery after the animals had been poisoned with carbon monoxide gas.

It is this gas which appears in the exhaust gas of motor cars and leads annually to deaths where drivers run their motors in closed garages.

The new antidote chemical, it was found, is too drastic in its action to be useful on animals higher in the scale of evolution than rodents.

Already a search is being made for variations of the chemical which are less irritating and might thus be used for higher animals. The hope, of course, is that the new line of investigation will eventually lead to discoveries having applications to human beings.

Champion Blood Donor Gave 980 Ounces in Year

CHICAGO.—Raymond Briez works in the public markets of Paris, but he also has a thriving business of his own. He engages in the manufacture of blood, and since he entered the business in 1924 he has sold 257 quarts.

The output of Briez's human factory—his own body—is enormous when one considers that it takes only 7½ quarts of blood to fill the blood vessels of an adult man. During 1935, Briez manufactured enough blood to supply himself and to give 98 transfusions. Each transfusion averaged about ten ounces or a total of 980 ounces. Last year broke all his previous sales records.

The champion blood donor of Paris started his manufacturing business in a small way. In 1924 he gave blood for four transfusions. The next year his orders jumped to 38. In 1927 the number of transfusions supplied by him attained the astonishing figure of 94 and from that time until 1935 he averaged from 50 to 60 a year.

Drift of Continent Westward Studied by Observatories

Science Seeks Answer to Geological Riddle

ARE the Americas drifting westward? If so, whither and where from? These questions, and several others, the International Astronomical Union and the International Geodetic and Geophysical Union are endeavoring to answer, through world-wide measuring of differences in longitude between all the important observatories of the world, and between several additional stations.

Definite answer to the question may have to wait for perhaps a generation.

The Wegener theory, that all the continents of the earth once formed a single immense land mass, which eventually broke up into various continents, further holds that Europe, Asia, and Africa remained fairly well in their original positions, while North and South America moved to the westward and Australia to the southward.

Bridged With Europe?

The late Doctor Wegener offered this theory in substitution for the older theory of a land-bridge connecting America and Europe, to account for the similarities in existing plants and animals on the two sides of the Atlantic. Wegener's theory seems borne out by the remarkable similarities between the eastern shore lines of the Americas and the western coasts of Europe and Africa, especially their deepwater lines.

In an effort to test the theory, studies were undertaken by astronomers and geodesists in 1926 to determine whether such drifts still exist. The Dominion of Canada participated through its stations at Ottawa and Vancouver, and the United States through stations at Washington, D. C., San Diego, Calif., Honolulu, Hawaii, and Manila, P. I. Observatories at Greenwich, Paris, Algiers, and Tokyo, and at many other important points, also took leading parts in the measurements.

Tests Repeated.

In 1933 similar measurements were repeated, more with the intention of strengthening the former network than with any hope of definitely settling the question after such a short lapse of time.

Aviator's Disease New Ailment That Baffles Medicine

CHICAGO.—Now comes aeroneurosis, a new disorder occurring only in airplane pilots.

Dr. Harry G. Armstrong, captain in the United States army medical corps, stationed at Dayton, Ohio, describes this special form of functional nervous disorder in a long report to the Journal of the American Medical Association published in Chicago. He reports 18 cases of the disease in the 163 pilots who have been under his observation during the last three years.

Attacks Best Men.

Unfortunately the disease is likely to attack the best men in the flying service. Usually a pilot has been flying ten or fifteen years before he develops aeroneurosis. The chief cause is profound emotional stress resulting from the accident hazards of flying and from economic and social insecurity. Possibly there is destruction of nerve tissue.

Chief among the symptoms of aeroneurosis are irritability, stomach distress, sleeplessness, ceaseless activity and depletion of the higher mental centers. It takes more than a doctor to treat the disorder properly in Doctor Armstrong's opinion. The best medicine, he thinks, is suitable compensation, "either ego-stimulating or monetary."

Harvard Confirms Comet Discovered by Garage Mechanic

CAMBRIDGE, MASS. — The first new comet to be discovered this year, visible through small telescopes as it rides slowly through the northern heavens near the pole, has been sighted by Leslie C. Peltier of Delphos, Ohio, thirty-two-year-old garage employee who has become one of the world's outstanding amateur astronomers.

The comet, the fifth to be discovered by Peltier, has been photographed at the Harvard observatory here, where Dr. Harlow Shapley, director, announced the find.

Position of Comet.

The body has a tail about one degree long and is located in the northern constellation, Cepheus. Its position is given by Doctor Shapley as declination plus 73 degrees, right ascension 23 hours 45 minutes.

The comet is of the ninth magnitude at present and Doctor Shapley expects it to remain that bright for some time it is moving south and east.

Peltier, who has also discovered a nova, was awarded the merit prize of the American Association of Variable Star Observers, an international group of amateur astronomers, two years ago.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"Hands Up"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

Famous Headline Hunter

WELL, sir, you boys and girls seem to have had adventures with about everything there is, but here's a bird with a new one. He is Morton Greenbaum of New York city, and he had an adventure with the English language.

Of course, that wasn't all of the adventure. There was a dark, sinister looking man in it—a man that frightened Mort almost to death. But the English language certainly played a big part, and to my mind it deserves most of the credit for the affair.

Mort came to this country from Hungary in the fall of 1921, and made his home, at first, with a sister in Cleveland, Ohio. His sister conducted a grocery business there and she and Mort lived in rooms upstairs over the store. He stayed with his sister while he was learning English.

Mort worked hard over his English, for he realized that the sooner he had it learned, the sooner he could get a job and take his place in the community. Every evening he went to night classes at the Central High school, and in between times he brushed up on his class work by reading the newspapers.

Mort Believes Stick-up Guys Were Real Peril.

And from those papers, Mort got a mighty funny conception of what these United States were like. The post-war crime wave was on, and the papers were full of stories about holdups. Mort didn't stop to think that those crime items were gathered from all over the country, and from all over the environs of Cleveland.

He thought of them in terms of the small towns in Hungary which he knew. And the result was that he began thinking of America as a place where law and order had broken down completely—where bandits ran wild all over town—something like our own conception of the banditry in China. He felt that, almost any minute, he might run across a stick-up man. And the thought wasn't very comforting.

Then, one day in October, it happened. Mort had been plugging along on his English, and had learned a bunch of words that he recognized when he saw them on paper. But when people pronounced them, or when he tried to say them himself—well—that was a different matter. Pronunciation was the thing that was bothering him most when, one day, as he was watching the store while his sister had gone upstairs for a few minutes, a man came walking in.

This Looked Like an Honest-to-Goodness Hold-up.

He came in silently, and that frightened Mort right at the start. He was a huge colored man and he stood in front of Mort with his right hand hidden in his pocket. "The pocket bulged," says Mort, "and something in it gave out a metallic sound. The man looked straight at me and, in a depressed but energetic tone, hissed one word: 'Hands'p."

The Colored Man's Right Hand Was Hidden in His Pocket.

Hande up! Mort knew that word all too well. He had seen it in the newspapers too many times not to know what it meant. "Strangely enough," he says, "I didn't seem to be afraid to die. True, my legs gave way and I could hardly rise from the stool I was sitting on, but the prospect of my own death was not so disturbing as the thought that my only sister, a mother of five little children, might come down any minute.

"Accordingly, with all the self-control I could command, I began retreating along the counter toward the stairs so that if my sister appeared I might give her a sign to apprise her of the danger."

Black Man Has a Single-Track Mind.

At the same time, Mort felt that he ought to say something to keep that bird's mind off such ideas as shooting Mort. But the only thing he could think of was a feeble "Wh-a-at?" The big colored man seemed to be losing patience. "Hands'p!" he growled, this time louder and more insistently than before.

"I had nearly reached the stairs," says Mort, "when the man seemed to lose his patience entirely. He brought his hand from his pocket—without a gun in it, to be sure—and gesticulating savagely in a certain direction above my head, bellowed from the depths of his lungs, 'Handsop!'"

And at that same moment, Mort heard his sister coming down the stairs. The thing he most feared had happened. His brain reeled and his knees began giving way under him, but he pulled himself together and whispered to his sister in Hungarian: "Honey—man says, 'Handsop!'"

This Hold-up Has an Extremely Happy Ending.

But the dread warning didn't seem to make any impression on Mort's sister. She kept right on coming down those stairs. This time, Mort lost all sense of caution: "Honey," he almost shouted. "Don't you hear? Handsop!"

And Mort's sister looked at Mort as if to say, "Well, what are you yelling about." What she did say, was: "All right. Give him one of those red cans on the second shelf."

Puzzled, bewildered, Mort turned in the direction she was pointing. "And on the sides of those little red cans," says Mort, "my alien eyes spelled out the legend hand soap! I had tripped up on nothing more dangerous than the niceties of pronunciation of the syllables 'up' and 'op.' And the metallic sounding thing in the colored man's pocket was only the jingle of a few pennies with which he paid for his purchase."

Revolutionary War Trick

Maj. David Zeigler, who upon appointment by President Jefferson became the first marshal of the Ohio district, was taken prisoner in Philadelphia during the Revolutionary war together with two other American officers. Soon afterward the three men escaped and, in fleeing, stopped at the house of a German family near the city. Major Zeigler, who had begun his military career in the army of Frederick the Great, posed as a Dutch doctor to gain the friendship of the German family. Making some pills of bread and water, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer, he cured the wife of some minor ailment and the three men were thereafter not only treated cordially but did not have to pay any bills for board and lodging.

"Feather in Your Cap"

The phrase, "feather in your cap," means that something is an honor to you. The allusion is to the very general custom in Asia and among the American Indians of adding a feather to the headgear for every enemy slain. The ancient Lycians, and many others had a similar custom, and it is still usual for the English sportsman who kills the first woodcock to pick out a feather and stick it in his cap. The custom in one form or another seems to be almost universal. In Hungary at one time none might wear a feather but he who had slain a Turk, and it will be remembered that when Gordon quelled the Taiping rebellion he was honored by the Chinese government with the "yellow jacket and peacock's feather."

Gilbert K. Chesterton, dead at sixty-two, weighed more than two hundred and fifty pounds. As every doctor will surmise, he died of heart disease. His weight explains the unnecessarily early death. A pump breaks down if you overwork it; a sixty-two-year-old heart breaks down if you compel it to supply with blood—food, drink, oxygen—too many billions of cells.

Arthur Brisbane

Every cell in the body must have, from a laboring heart, its supply of food and oxygen, pumped every second.

The brain, alone, contains thirty thousand million separate cells, according to Doctor Carrel. In his 100 surplus pounds, Chesterton carried scores of billions of useless cells, each making an unnecesary demand on the heart.

Do not let yourself remain fat after forty if you would live to be old. To become thin and stay thin requires some effort of the will, often more disagreeable than dying.

At one of the ultra-radical workers' meetings in France, the red flag displayed and the communist "international" hymn sung, there was radical and determined talk. Monsieur Thorez told the meeting the factories of France would soon belong to the workers.

If the plan is sent through some workers would discover that it takes more than a red flag and a hymn to run a factory and make it pay; if factories did not pay there would be no payrolls. Brains count as well as hands. The eyes carry no load, but they direct the feet and hands.

South China thought she wanted a war with Japan, and will probably have it. Troops from a Japanese naval squadron land at Amoy, Fuklen province, accompanied by the usual convincing flock of airplanes.

War with Japan is the easiest thing to have, if you really want it.

In Canton, South China's big city, parades and mass meetings were organized to increase and express hatred of Japan.

The outpouring recalls Voltaire's description of a glass of English beer—"froth at the top, dregs at the bottom."

Russian sovietism came quickly, and might go quickly; signs of a breakdown are seen already. Those that do more and better work get special rewards; engineers, chemists, scientists occupy fine apartments compared with those of ordinary workmen. That is hardly "straight communism." Now Russia will have a constitution and house of parliament, important steps in the direction of conservatism.

Tell your little boy and girl to include in their prayers the following:

"And please, Lord, do not send us any more wars."

Uncle Sam recently began delivering hundreds of millions of bonus bond dollars to 3,518,000 veterans of the war—many veterans and a big bonus, for a war in which we were not concerned until foolishness pushed us in.

The French Premier Blum, first Jewish prime minister in French history, is a man of unusual ability, combining common sense with the radicalism of his Socialist party. Mr. Birchall writes to the New York Times that there is fear of anti-Semitic outbreaks in France; observers "see a ground-swell of an anti-Semitic movement in the vicious attacks of the right against the new Jewish premier." French anti-Semitism, according to Mr. Birchall, has survived the Dreyfus case, which should have ended it.

Our railroads find it hard to make money, but at least they are safe railroads.

W. Averell Harriman presented a gold safety medal from the fund established in memory of his father, E. H. Harriman, to F. E. Williamson, president of the New York Central, which has not lost one life in 12 years.

It is interesting to learn from Mr. Ripley that the first Cunard steamship did not carry as many passengers as could be carried by one of the lifeboats on the Queen Mary. What is more important, each lifeboat has wireless apparatus.

Spain proves that it is possible for a country to be too radical for its own good. Labor troubles and discussions have put one million Spanish workers out of their jobs, a good many for Spain; and Spanish radicalism goes beyond other kinds, many having been killed by "terrorists."

The last chapter in the Lindbergh murder and kidnaping tragedy is written with the return to Colonel Lindbergh of $14,665 held by New Jersey as evidence against Hauptmann.

Long Beards Are Traced to Days of Israelites

Tradition says that Adam wore a bushy beard, and the Israelites in Egypt distinguished themselves from their masters by cultivating long ones. Thus all artistic representatives of Biblical patriarchs depict them long-bearded. Aaron's beard is proverbial, and to swear by the beard constituted the most solemn oath. Mahomet followed the ancient tradition and never allowed a razor on his face. Mohammedans still swear by the beard of the Prophet. The Romans called the unshaven, bearded inhabitants of northern Europe, who eventually brought about the empire's fall, "barbarians," from the Latin barba, a beard, from which we get our "barber" and from which the famous Barbarossa, or Red Beard, was named, says Tit-Bits Magazine.

Queen Mary I sent four agents to Moscow, all bearded, and one of them, George Killingworth, had a beard five feet long which, it is said, made even Ivan the Terrible laugh! Hans Steininger, Burgomaster of Brannau, who died in 1567, is shown in his monument in the parish church there with a parted beard beautifully waved, which reaches below his feet, and, were it pulled straight, would be six feet long. The actual beard is preserved in the local museum. It is in two ropes, and its color is reddish brown.

Brazil Nut Crops Never Planted and Not Picked

There is no stranger harvest than that which supplies the demand for Brazil nuts, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly. No human hand has ever sown the seeds, nor does the crop ever need picking. It lies, patiently waiting man's pleasure, on the sodden forest floor of that immense stretch of tropical jungleland in the lower Amazon valley. Here flourishes the Brazil nut tree, or castanha do Para, as the natives call it.

Despite this unusual lavishness of Nature, no harvest could be harder to win; none is fraught with more risks. Before reaching the wild nut groves the castanheiros (nut gatherers) must penetrate hundreds of miles of fetid streams and swamps, home of flesh-eating fish, venomous water snakes and electric eels. The final stages of their journey must be hacked through dense matted undergrowth, where poisonous thorns, orchids, spiders and insects contest every yard of their progress.

The Clepsydra

Aeneas Tacticus wrote, about 350 B. C., describing an ingenious signaling device called the clepsydra. Two cylindrical vessels, of the same size and shape, were provided with taps from which water would run at exactly the same rate. Into each vessel there was loosely fitted a float to which was attached an upright rod marked off into equal sections. On the corresponding sections of each rod, identical messages were written. When a message was to be sent, the attendant at the sending station displayed a torch. This signal was acknowledged by displaying a torch at the receiving station whereupon the attendants at both stations started the water running from their clepsydras. When the rod at the sending station had sunk so that the desired message was level with the rim of the vessel the attendant there again signaled with his torch. The rod at the receiving station had, of course, sunk to the corresponding message which was then read by the attendant there.

"Marino Store Dealer"

When a sailing ship came into port in the old days a man used to go aboard and bid for the old sails that had been torn by tropical storms. He was also given odd lengths of rope and all the junk accumulated during a voyage of many months. "Marine store dealer" was the man's title and he dealt with ships which sailed the Seven Seas. Later there was little for the marine store dealer to do—the big shipping lines managed their own affairs. As his trade with ships went, the dealer started to buy rags, old bottles and the like from houses in seaport towns. Now he has become the unpronounceable rag and bone man—though still his official name is marine store dealer.—Pearson's Weekly.

Care in Little Things

He that has "a spirit of detail" will do better in life than many who figured beyond him in the university. Such a one is minute and particular—He adjusts trifles, and these trifles compose most of the business and happiness of life.—Great events happen seldom, and affect few; trifles happen every moment to everybody, and though one occurrence of them adds little to the happiness or misery of life; yet the sum total of their continual repetition is of the highest consequence.

Blue Paul

A great many years ago a dog resembling a cross between a mastiff and bulldog was quite popular in Scotland. It was called Blue Paul and was used primarily as a pit dog for fighting. The breed is considered extinct.

Forest of Arden

Englishmen claim that Shakespeare's romantic forest in "As You Like It" is the Forest of Arden in Warwickshire, which fits the description. Belgians claim it is the Forest of Ardennes. Either may be right, for both forests are romantic and lovely.

Great Armies of Blind Ants Rout All Enemies

Where are they going? No one knows. But tiger, lion, elephant or human being, all fly in terror before their blind advance. For these are the armies of the blind ants—and when they meet a resistance they cannot see, they go through it, declares a writer in Pearson's Weekly.

Driver ants are only an inch long, but they are the most dreaded of living creatures. They are trained as methodically as any army. Their columns of march are perfectly organized with the females packed in the center, flanked each side by a strong line of protecting males.

In front of the column march the soldiers and skirmishing parties. Their job is to find suitable camping sites and to give warning of danger.

Their method of crossing a river is ingenious. The soldiers select a suitable spot for crossing. The ants then break column, and form themselves onto a compact ball—females inside, males next, and outside, the more powerful soldiers. This ball rolls down the bank into the stream and is whirled across to the other side by the current.

When the driver ants come to a village the inhabitants run for their lives. To remain would be to be eaten alive. The drivers devour every rat, spider, dog or chicken that is left, before passing on in their relentless march. They are, in fact, nature's spring cleaners, for the villages are always cleaner after their visit.

Keys an Ancient Symbol of Power and Authority

Keys have always been the symbol of power and authority, notes a writer in the Montreal Herald.

The ancients believed that their gods held the keys of the life-giving fertilizing rivers, and thus controlled the rise and fall of the waters.

Babylonians, who seem to have been the first users of keys, represented their gods as carrying keys.

The Romans gave some of their deities the title of "Key-Bearer." Hecate the three-headed goddess of enchantment, was supposed to hold the keys of the gates of Hades. Janus, the sun-god, held the keys of peace and war, times and seasons.

Modern wedding rings have their origin in ancient Rome. When the newly-wed wife came to her new home she was solemnly presented with the keys, suspended from a metal ring which became the bridal ring.

Roman law recognized the key-ring as a symbol of authority given by the husband to his bride when he made the Roman marriage vow: "Where I am master, you shall be mistress!"

Smoke Telegraph

Among sight signals, some of the earliest and most widely employed for communication by day were based on the rising of smoke. Since man, alone of all animals, uses fire, the appearance of smoke was always accepted by primitive man as evidence of the presence of another human being. If not self-explanatory, a column of smoke signified the danger of a potential enemy. If, however, the smoke was seen in some particular place, or appeared in some particular manner, it was a symbol of friendship and, through the use of a prearranged code, could be used for communication. By alternately covering a smoldering fire with a blanket and uncovering it, the North American Indian broke the steady column of smoke, which rose from it, up into a series of puffs or clouds, the sequence or combinations of which could be used, according to prearrangement, to "telegraph" from place to place, either directly or by the use of relays.

How Indians Tanned Hides

One process used by the Indians in tanning deer hides was first to scrape off all fat and flesh adhering to the pelt. Then the fat and brains of the deer would be rubbed into the flesh side and the skin rinsed out in water repeatedly. It was a long and tedious process to create a really fine piece of buckskin, states a writer in the Detroit News, but the Indians didn't mind for they had plenty of time on their hands and, anyway, the squaws did most of the work. Two kinds of buckskin were created; one was white and the other smoke-tanned. The last was repeatedly smoked during the tanning process over a small fire with plenty of smoke. After many weeks of labor the hide would be ready for fashioning in garments.

"Entangling Alliances"

Washington, in his farewell address, published September 17, 1796, said: "Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor or caprice?" It was Jefferson who said "Peace, commerce and honest friendship with all nations—entangling alliances with none." This was in his first inaugural address, March 4, 1801.

Jimson Weed Not a Native

Oddly enough, the evil smelling and poisonous jimson weed is of Asiatic origin although its present name is American. It was known as the Jamestown weed because of its prevalence in the region of that colony and this name was later corrupted to jimson. Jimson weed is a member of the datura family from the leaves of which the drug stramonium is derived.

EYES OF THE WORLD

REPORTER-PHOTOGRAPHERS, hundreds of them, constantly scour the world for "shots" that will make a news highlight more real . . . more interesting . . . more understandable. The single, business-like click of a camera and a thousand-word story is captured, all in an instant, to be presented in a manner more graphic than the words themselves could ever attain.

The scenes these men photograph number into the thousands daily. From this great number a careful selection is made. The chosen pictures, designed to aid you in the visualization of important news events or "human-interest" occurrences and individuals, are regularly offered by this newspaper.

This is our answer to a modern public's demand upon a modern newspaper for pictures of places, persons and incidents of world-wide interest.

74th Congress Adjourns After a Long Session

THE Seventy-fourth congress adjourned after a session lasting five and a half months during which it appropriated nearly $10,000,000,000 and was faced by some unexpected legislative complications.

In the closing hours the emergency tax bill which is expected to produce $800,000,000 in revenue was passed. Supreme court invalidation of the AAA and Guffey coal bills and the passage of the cash soldiers' bonus over the President's veto upset the budget plans and made such a bill necessary.

Although it was passed by the house, the amended Guffey coal bill designed to remove the objections of the Supreme court failed of passage in the senate. Similarly, the Wagner slum housing bill, which had passed the senate, failed in the house.

Larger than normal appropriations for governmental activities were passed. The bonus, farm payments, relief and the greatest national defense program in peace time history helped swell the total.

Funds for continuing the present relief program were voted; the public works revolving fund was amended to permit more heavy construction projects. But congress failed to approve the Florida ship canal and Passamaquoddy tide dam.

Invalidation of the AAA brought a revised and expanded soil conservation and domestic allotment act; the rural electrification administration and electric farm and home authority were both placed on a permanent basis; the Commodity Credit corporation was expanded; two flood control bills were passed. Labor received attention through the Walsh-Healy bill dealing with working conditions on government contracts. A compromise ship subsidy bill was rushed through in the closing hours. Financial legislation included expansion of the jurisdiction of SEC. Important among business legislation was the Patman bill amending the Clayton anti-trust act regarding price discrimination.

A number of important bills failed of enactment. Among these were the Pettingill long and short hauls bill, stockyard regulation, Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage bill, and bills on the 30-hour week, extension of the railroad co-ordinator's tenure, anti-war profits, alien deportation, enlargement of the federal trade commission's power and treasury agency service.

Smith Asks Roosevelt "Be Put Aside"

CALLING upon the delegates to the Democratic national convention to "put aside Franklin D. Roosevelt" and to nominate "some genuine Democrat" for President, former Gov. Alfred E. Smith and four other anti-administration Democrats charged the New Deal with failure.

Al Smith

The demand came in the form of a telegram and was signed by Smith, Bainbridge Colby, secretary of state under President Wilson, James A. Reed, former senator from Missouri, Joseph B. Ely, former governor of Massachusetts, and Daniel F. Cohalan, former justice of the Supreme court of New York.

Former Governor Smith and his colleagues indicated that they will not support President Roosevelt in the forthcoming Presidential campaign, fulfilling Smith's previous threat to "take a walk."

Pro-Roosevelt delegates from every section of the country prepared for a concerted attack upon the "bolters."

Gov. Herbert Lehman of New York turned his back upon Mr Smith and predicted President Roosevelt would carry New York by a substantial majority in November. He declared:

"I have read the statement. I am confident that the views expressed by the five signers of statement represent the feelings of only a handful of Democrats."

Death Takes von Buelow Noted German Diplomat

THE death of Bernhard W. von Buelow, secretary of state for foreign affairs in the Hitler cabinet, removed one of the most skilled of Europe's diplomats. Von Buelow, who was fifty-one, was an expert on the League of Nations and gave his country valuable counsel when Germany began to consider rejoining the league. He was noted as a studious and hard-working official, with a vast amount of detailed information always readily available.

A "blueblood" of the German nobility, the diplomat was a nephew of the late Prince Bernhard von Buelow, imperial chancellor. He was one of the first of the German nobles to associate himself with the republican regime after the collapse of the empire in 1918. Although different in background from Hitler, he nevertheless enjoyed the chancellor's confidence.

In diplomatic circles it was regarded as likely that Dr. Hans Dieckhoff chief of the political department of the foreign office, will succeed Buelow as secretary of state.

In Russia, Maxim Gorky, early foe of the czars who became a hero of the Soviet regime and its outstanding writer, died of influenza at the age of sixty-eight. Although not a member of the Communist party, Gorky had a preeminent position in Soviet life and was a former member of the central executive committee. Moscow honored him with a public funeral and interment in the Kremlin in a niche facing Lenin's tomb.

Rep. Lemke Will Be Presidential Candidate

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM LEMKE of North Dakota announced that he would run for the Presidency as candidate of a new political group known as the Union party. Father Charles E. Coughlin, Detroit priest, is the leading sponsor of Lemke's candidacy. Thomas Charles O'Brien of Boston will be the vice-presidential candidate on the ticket, it was announced.

Rep. Lemke

Mr. Lemke made public a 15-point platform embodying demands for refinancing of farm mortgages, old age security, a living wage for all workers, limitation on individual incomes, the establishment of a central bank, the issuance by congress of all currency and its regulation of the value of all the money.

Plans were made for the new party to hold a national convention some time during August in Cleveland.

Mr. Lemke said the Union party has the support of farm unions, labor, the National Union for Social Justice established by Father Coughlin, the Townsend old age pension movement and "all other liberals who have been driven from the old parties."

Packers Seek Recovery of All Processing Taxes

A BATTLE to recover all the processing taxes paid to the government under the invalidated AAA was undertaken by the "big four" of the packing industry—Swift and Company, Armour and Company, Wilson and Company and the Cudahy Packing company.

Having won back $45,000,000 when the AAA was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme court the packing industry has decided to attempt to recover from the government more than $200,000,000 paid before injunctions against the tax were granted and subsequent payments impounded.

The meat packing industry as a whole paid a total of $271,000,000 in processing taxes from the inception of the AAA. The packers are basing their claims for recovery on the ground that as the Supreme court ruled the processing taxes invalid, payments made in accordance with that law were illegally collected and should be returned. It was reported that smaller packing companies were considering action to recover their tax payments, but have waited until the major units in the industry instituted their proceedings. The total in tax recoveries sought by the four big Chicago companies is approximately $100,000,000.

U. S. Revokes Sanctions Imposed on Italy

FOLLOWING the lead of Great Britain, the United States formally revoked all sanctions imposed against Italy during the recent Italo-Ethiopian conflict. A proclamation by President Roosevelt declared all previous communications dealing with the sale of munitions of war, loans and travel by Americans on Italian ships was revoked.

Stanley Baldwin

Although the sanctions were against both Italy and Ethiopia, in practical application they were used only against Italy, since the United States did not supply the African nation with any war materials and the empire of Haile Selassie had no ships of its own.

The French cabinet agreed to abide by any action which the League of Nations may take in cancelling sanctions against Italy.

The British government's decision to abandon sanctions was defended in an address by Prime Minister Baldwin as the only alternative which would prevent a suicidal war plunging western civilization into "barbarous anarchy."

Farm Income Sharply Up In Year's First Quarter

FARM cash income from marketing in the United States amounted to $2,017,000,000 in the first four months of 1936, compared with $1,749,000,000 last year, an increase of 15.3 per cent, according to a compilation issued by the Alexander Hamilton institute.

The institute's figures showed that the price level during the first four months was 2.3 per cent lower than a year ago, but the quantity marketed showed an increase of 18.1 per cent.

Senator Fletcher of Florida Passes Away

DEATH "in the harness" came to Senator Duncan U. Fletcher, dean of the senate, who had represented Florida in the upper house for the last quarter of a century. He died suddenly at his home in Washington. Senator Fletcher, a strong supporter of the Roosevelt administration although he was considered a conservative, was chairman of the banking and currency committee which bore the brunt of the task involved in the currency reform legislation and the banking act of 1935.

Sen. Fletcher

President Roosevelt, in a statement eulogizing the senator, said 'the country has lost an able and conscientious servant in the death of Senator Fletcher." He declared the Floridian "was ever actuated by motives of high patriotism and unselfish devotion to the public welfare."

The death of Senator Fletcher followed closely the passing of Senator Park Trammel of Florida and the death of Speaker Joseph W. Byrns of Tennessee.

Senator Fletcher was born in Sumter county, Georgia, January 6, 1859. He was graduated from Vanderbilt university in 1880 and began the practice of law in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1881. He was elected to the United States senate in 1908 and had been renominated and re-elected in each subsequent term.

Republicans Make Plans for Coming Campaign

IN TOPEKA, Kan., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican nominee for the Presidency, met Col. Frank Knox, Vice Presidential nominee, and Chairman John Hamilton and members of the executive committee of the Republican national committee to make plans for the coming campaign. Speaking itineraries for Governor Landon and Colonel Knox were discussed as well as other campaign strategy.

John Hamilton

Youth is definitely represented in the reorganized personnel of the executive committee which will chart the Republican course. Hamilton, the new chairman, is forty-four. The youngest member, Robert P. Burroughs of Manchester, N. H., is thirty-six. Seven new members attended the meeting, including Burroughs; Representative Joseph W. Martin, Jr., North Attleboro, Mass.; J. Will. Taylor, Knoxville, Tenn.; Mrs. Horace Sayre, Ardmore, Okla.; Mrs. John Wyeth, St. Joseph, Mo.; Ezra Whitla, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; and Earl Warren, Oakland, Calif. Members returned to the committee are: Charles D. Hilles, New York; Harrison E. Spangler, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; R. B. Creager, Brownsville, Texas; Mrs. Bertha Baur, Chicago, Ill.; Mrs. Paul Fitzsimmons, Newport, R. I.; Walter S. Hallahan, Charleston, W. Va.; and George Ball, Muncie, Ind.

In the reorganization of the committee, Hamilton traded posts with Henry P. Fletcher, who took over the job of counsel for the committee. C. B. Goodspeed of Chicago succeeded George F. Getz as treasurer. The other committee officers include four vice chairmen: Ralph E. Williams, Oregon; J. Henry Roraback, Connecticut; Mrs. John E. Hillman, Colorado; and Mrs. James Worthington, Pennsylvania.

Far-East Situation Reaches Grave Crisis

THE situation in the Far East reached a graver crisis. Friction between Japan and China became more intense when it was reported that a Chinese customs cruiser had fired upon a Japanese ship, off the harbor of Chikou, Hopei province.

At the same time foreign residents of Peiping were amazed at the spectacle of 3,000 Japanese troops in full war regalia parading through the legation quarter. While Japanese officers declined to explain the unprecedented influx of troops, observers declared that the soldiers were from nearby Tungchow and Fengtai.

International Conference on Mediterranean Problems

A GENERAL review of the naval and military problems in the Mediterranean loomed as the result of Turkey's request to fortify the Dardanelles. Meeting in Montreux, Switzerland, delegates from Great Britain, France, Italy, Turkey, Japan, Greece and Yugoslavia indicated they would lay before an international conference the objectives in which their nations are interested.

It was reported that Great Britain was considering presentation of a mutual assistance naval pact in the Mediterranean, providing for Italy's participation. Should such a step be taken, it would extend a series of such pacts which were concluded between Britain and France, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey against Italy at the time sanctions were imposed on Il Duce.

It was believed that Japan would seek liberation from the clause of the Lausanne agreement by which she, with Great Britain, France and Italy, guaranteed freedom of the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora and the Bosphorus.

Russia was expected to urge a ban on the passage of warships to the Black sea, while demanding the right of Soviet fighting vessels and submarines to come into the Mediterranean, in the event she engaged in war.

...ere will be others of the same warp and woof. There will be old-line Democrats who will do as Senator Copeland of New York has done, take a walk. Alfred E. Smith is not going to support the New Dealers nor will a great many of his followers. So, it is obvious that each party will be subjected to defections of one kind or another.

Now, concerning mistakes that have been made:

Chairman Farley made a bad mistake politically when he said that Alfred M. Landon was "just the little-known governor of a typical prairie state." That remark has been rising to haunt the Democratic chairman almost daily since it escaped from his lips, and unless I miss my guess he will hear it repeated, thrown into his teeth, so many times between now and November that the words will give him a stomachache equivalent to green apples.

Some Mistakes

The reasons this remark was a serious blunder are two. First and foremost is that every state in the Union rightfully has justified pride of its people, its commerce and industry and its future prospects. Every state feels profound resentment when its capacity to do great things is questioned. Consequently, when Mr. Farley catalogued Kansas as a typical prairie state and its governor as little-known, there was a surging tidal wave of resentment, and it was not confined to Kansas alone.

The second reason why Mr. Farley's remark cut the wrong way was that Mr. Farley is a New Yorker and a Tammanyite. There is something repulsive to the millions of mid-westerners about Tammany, and a very great many residents of prairie states long have objected to the attempt of certain New Yorkers to "run things" for the whole United States.

Another mistake that has been made, really a series of mistakes, is the coercion that has been permitted to go on among those receiving relief. It is not exactly fair to charge Mr. Farley and President Roosevelt with these, yet I am inclined to believe they could have prevented local Democratic politicians from attempting to force relief clients to vote the Democratic ticket. That condition has obtained in as many as fifteen states.

It is one of those things in politics that naturally causes a revulsion of feeling, yet it is one of those things with which the leaders possibly may have had nothing directly to do. The fact that they might have prevented it and did not is accepted by the average voter in exactly the same light as though a written order directing such procedure had been issued.

The handling of the tax question by the administration in this session of congress has not been of a character warranting too much praise. It has alienated many influential persons who might otherwise have supported Mr. Roosevelt. Of course, in the end the President can say that he wanted additional funds in order to start the balancing of the national budget, but I know of a great number of Democrats in congress who have been thoroughly displeased by the White House insistence for a reform tax law rather than a revenue law. It seems to me, therefore, that a considerable amount of campaign material will be developed from this fact.

And so it goes with Democratic mistakes.

On the Other Hand

On the other side of the picture, the Republicans can make mistakes yet, plenty of them. They have an advantage over the Democrats in one regard: they have not been charged with the responsibility of government for the last three and one-half years, and therefore will not have to answer for mistakes in administration. It lies in the hands of the Republican managers, therefore, to prevent political mistakes between now and election if they are capable of so doing. They have started out with an offensive campaign and have an opportunity to continue it, whereas the Democrats can conduct an offensive campaign only so long as they can avoid entering into a defense of Roosevelt New Deal policies.

I understand that the Democratic national committee is loaded to the dashboard with material for attack, but from this stage of the battle it seems quite apparent that they are going to need plans for defense as well as offense, and they will not have enthusiastic support from some spots in their own army.

The Democrats are prepared to attack Governor Landon on the theory that the country cannot feel sure of his plans and policies; that he has done nothing to enable the country to appraise him and that there is no assurance, in event of his election, that he is a big enough man for the job of Chief Executive. On the other hand, the Republicans can counter-attack by using the language of Senator Copeland, New York Democrat, who declared that no man nor party disregarding its pledges was to be trusted, and right there is where the New Dealers must begin to defend.

Baby-Swapping

THE "baby-swapping" incident in Owen Wister's "The Virginian" was no figment of the novelist's imagination. It was based on fact, even though it took place in Kansas instead of Wyoming.

In October, 1867, Capt. Perry Hutchinson finished erecting a flour mill on the Big Blue river, only a short distance from the Oregon Trail, near the present city of Maryville, Kan. Then he and his wife decided to hold a "house warming" and invite settlers from all parts of the county to a dance to be held on the lower floor of the mill. An upper room was arranged for a banquet and an adjoining room, also upstairs, was fixed for the mothers who brought their babies.

It was into this room that three young daredevils of the community—Dave Walker, Cale Osborne and Andy Travelute—stole quietly while the parents of the youngsters were enjoying their dance below and mixed up the babies, just as Wister has described the incident in his book. And it was to the mill early the next morning that the indignant fathers and mothers came to "swap offspring" and get back their own.

How did the incident become transplanted to Wyoming? Two of the indignant parents were Dr. and Mrs. J. J. Crawford. A brother of Doctor Crawford was Capt. Jack Crawford, the famous "Poet-Scout," who was a friend of Wister's and told him the tale. At a dance in the Bear Creek country, which Wister attended one night while he was in Wyoming, he remembered the yarn. Result: It was woven into his story and attributed to his fictional heroes, "the Virginian" and "Lin McLean."

First Football Helmet

BACK in the early days of football, the days of "flying wedges," mass plays and no forward passes, its husky players wore little of the protective armor of later days. They went into the fray bare-headed—and hoped for the best!

So on December 2, 1893, when the Navy team trotted out on the field for the fourth game of the first series played with the Army, spectators looked with amazement at one of the Navy players. It was Capt. Joseph M. Reeves and he was wearing a clumsy contraption on his head. It was a heavy felt pad, covered with doeskin, and tied with leather straps under his chin, which made him look very much like a Tibetan lama.

But there was a good reason for his wearing it. The hard-hitting captain had suffered a head injury, and if he didn't play, defeat of the Navy was almost certain. So the coach had the trainer fashion this helmet—the first ever used in football—for him and it enabled him to stay through the whole game which the Navy won by a score of 6 to 4.

The Captain Reeves of 1893-94 in later years became Rear-Admiral Reeves and a member of the general board in the Navy department at Washington. Another member of that team was also marked for future distinction. He was known then as "Spooney" Churchill, right guard. A later generation of Americans was to know him as Winston Churchill, author of "The Crossing," "The Crisis" and a number of other distinguished novels of American life.

Right-o!

BACK in the days when Americans amused themselves with thinking up curiosities in the use of words, some unknown poet composed these lines to aid writers of "write":

"Write" we know is written right,
When we see it written "write";
But when we see it written "wright";
We know it is not written right;
For "write," to have it written right,
Must not be written "right" or "wright,"
Nor yet should it be written "rite";
But "write," for so 'tis written right!

Appropriate comment on that, of course, is the English expression of "Right-o!" Which recalls the verse written by an American after his return from England where he had difficulty in adjusting himself to English traffic laws. He declared:

The laws of the road are a paradox quite
For when you are traveling along,
If you keep to the LEFT you're sure to be RIGHT,
If you keep to the RIGHT you'll be WRONG!

ALASKAN FACTS

The largest city in Alaska is the capital, Juneau, with a population of 4,043 in 1930. The total white population of Alaska is 28,640. Fishing is the most important industry; other industries are gold, copper, silver and coal mining, lumbering, fur farming and trapping, reindeer raising, etc. There is great diversity in climate; in the interior a temperature of 60 degrees below zero in winter is not unusual, with a temperature of 90 degrees in the summer, but on the coast the thermometer rarely falls below zero in winter, with a maximum of about 80 degrees in the summer. For information as to present business and industrial conditions in Alaska, write to the Superintendent of Documents at Washington, D. C., for list of pamphlets.

Credit Where Credit is Due

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN
National Chairman Sentinels of the Republic

Who is doing the real work that leads America toward Recovery?

During recent weeks we've heard many answers to that question. Headlines have bristled with claims and counter-claims . with reports of speeches that give the credit to political officeholders with statements that would award the honor to the prophets of strange and unproved economic theories.

But amid the thunders of oratory the true claimant is ignored.

He is the man who, while politicians clamored and theorists argued, continued quietly, faithfully, effectively to do the day's work; to support himself, his family—and America.

He is the man — whether farmer or hired help, merchant or clerk, executive or mechanic — under whose hand and care the fields maintained their yield, the products of farm and factory kept moving, the wheels of industry continued to revolve.

He is the man who earned and paid the taxes—direct or indirect—that kept this country a going concern and met the payrolls of the political job-holders who would take the credit unto themselves.

He isn't one man. He represents millions of self-reliant citizens who maintain and support and operate the homes and the farms and the workshops of America.

He is the type that built America in the past, that is upholding America in the present, that will make America more glorious in the future.

Individually, he is the real American.

Collectively, he is the Real America.

Let the political and economic soothsayers continue their claims and their promises.

But, meanwhile, let's give credit where credit is due.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Runge and son, Jack, and Dwight Hummell, spent the week end touring scenic northeastern Iowa along the Mississippi river, visiting McGregor, Lansing, Decorah, the cave at Harmon, Minn., and the clocks at Spillville.

COUNTY AVERAGE PAYMENTS BASED ON PRODUCTIVITY

County Agent S J Oberhauser reminds Hancock County farmers that the average rate of the soil-conserving (Class I) payment that was announced recently Is Not necessarily the rate which each individual farmer will receive for diverting acreage under the 1936 Agricultural Conesrvation Program

The average rate for Hancock County is $13 10 an acre This rate applies only to diversionfrom the acreage of general soil-depleting crops such as corn oats, wheat and barley

The individual farm rates will be higher or lower than the county average depending upon the productivity of the individual farm, just as the county rates for counties all over the country are higher or lower than the national average of $10 per acre, depending up on the productivity of the land in each county

It is only natural that the county rates should be lower or higher than the national average In some areas where the soil is less productive rates are less than the national average Usually in these areas land values are lower and the rate represents about the same proportion of the productivity of the land as higher rates do in counties of better soil.

The productivity indexes, upon which the county rates of payment are based, were computed by the AAA on the basis of the yields of the 13 principal soil-depleting crops in each county in the 10-year period 1923 to 1932, inclusive, as determined from available statistics in the Department of Agriculture Necessary adjustments were made for crop failure The relative acreage of each crop in the county also was taken into consideration in computing the productivity index

The Lemke family gathering was held at the O. W Lemke home on Sunday evening, July 12th During the course of the evening cake and ice cream were served Those present were Mrs James Lilly and son of Cedar Rapids; Mr and Mrs Eric Clark and Mr and Mrs Carl Bohn and family of Garner, Mr. and Mrs Will Beier, of Goodell,

Miss Myrtle Geisler of Ventura. Mr. and Mrs John Lemke, Mr and Mrs Will Lemke and sons, Mr and Mrs. Rhine Lemke, Mrs. Daisy Lemke, Walter Lemke, Clarence Lemke and Miss Pearl Neuberger

MANY FIELDS OF OATS WERE CUT AND SHOCKED DURING THE PAST WEEK

Farmers Say Quality Better Than Expected A Few Weeks Ago

The torrid weather experienced for the past twelve days or longer brought a sudden ripening to the oats crop in this vicinity and a great many fields of oats were cut and shocked last week

Farmers say the oats is far better than they expected it would be and some oats is really of fine quality

With the thermometer at 100 degrees and above the oats ripened quickly and where a field looked rather green a few days before, it soon turned white and was ready for cutting

Because of the high temperatures most of the grain this year was cut with a tractor pulling the binder

Eight Cars Derailed Or Ditched South Of Town

IMPROVE AIR CONDITIONING IN KLEMME BUSINESS PLACES

"Necessity is the mother of invention" is an expression often heard and it is the reason for "air conditioning" in some Klemme business places.

The continued hot weather heated the buildings to such an extent that small electric fans had no effect whatever as cooling agents

The Editor conceived the bright idea of attaching a model T fan to a washing machine motor and with this idea went into a huddle with Fred J Arnold and Fred soon had turned out the required parts on his lathe and the "wind machine" was put into operation at the print shop Then along came Walt Thada who took one slant at the high powered fan and soon had one operating in his store. The idea began to spread and Kluckhohn's installed one in their store and Fred Arnold was kept busy making the "wind-pushers." Lee Riddel has one in his pool hall and Dr Dulmes has one to cool his office

Tuesday Fred still had three more motors to convert into the breeze makers. Washing machine motors and four bladed car fans are becoming as scarce as hen's teeth around Klemme now.

The right system to use is to put the motor-fan in the basement and hook it to a heating pipe or other improvised method of taking the cold air from the basement and blowing it up to the room that it is desired to cool.

FARMER HAS BROKEN ARM

Henry Schuldt is carrying his arm in a sling since one day last week when he fell and broke it. The accident happened when his son was in the barn locking the cows in their stanchions. A cow crowded the boy against a stall and he yelled for his father to help him In the rush to assist his son, Henry fell over the door sill and broke his arm The boy freed himself but was bruised about the shoulder

CORN SEEMS TO HOLD OWN WITH SCORCHING SUNSHINE

North Iowa is not unused to scorching 100 degree temperatures for a day or two, but the continued stretch of heat which has lasted nearly two weeks without a let-up and without rain during that time is new in the history of Iowa

The corn seems to stand the heat remarkably well and although the leaves curl up, there are but few stalks which have turned white in the fields But a good soaking rain followed by cool weather is badly needed for both corn and pastures in North Iowa

First Tomatoes?

For several days Mrs Wm. Smith has enjoyed tomatoes picked from her own garden Her daughter, Mrs Bert Mathews, of Clear Lake, had home grown tomatoes as early as July 4th this year

Replacing Perspiration Losses

Our custom-built cooling system—2 million glands—pours much salt and water out on the skin each day. Not only must water be taken in large quantities to replace the loss, but also salt.

Nutritionists say adding a little salt to a glass of water, or better still, to tomato juice, will do wonders at reviving lost pep on a hot day Too much salt of course, is not healthful. About a teaspoonful to a quart of water is recommended.

Our cooling system also frees some mineral salts from our bodys. These can be replaced by including plenty of fresh fruits and vegetables in the diet.

The heat Tuesday was the main factor which caused a serious railroad wreck on the Rock Island a mile south of Klemme Tuesday afternoon when two coal cars and three box cars left the rails and overturned, and two other box cars and the coach were derailed About one hundred yards of track were torn up and twisted and railroad ties ground to pulp-wood as the derailed cars tore up the road bed. The engine and several cars behind the engine did not leave the rails.

It is quite evident that the heat loosened rail spikes sufficiently to allow a section of the rail to loosen and spread and where the cars started to leave the rails this section of rail had turned over flat.

The conductor, J R Chilcot, of Iowa Falls, who was sitting at his desk in the coach at the time of the wreck, was badly shaken up and bruised He was brought to Klemme for medical attention and later taken to Iowa Falls for an X-Ray examination Others of the train crew were not injured

Wrecker On The Job

A wrecker and crew from Estherville arrived early in the evening to start cleaning up the wreckage. The crew worked all night and brought a couple of cars back to Klemme, but could not do a great deal until the roadbed had been rebuilt and rails laid.

The box cars which were tipped over in the ditch and those derailed were loaded with grain, and one was loaded with bluegrass seed.

AVERY FARM BUREAU MET WITH MRS. C. A. ARNOLD

A delightful program was given at the spacious farm home of Mrs. C A Arnold in Avery township. Mrs. W. L. Thada, Mrs. C J Wille and Mrs. Richard Ax gave an interesting report of their recent trip to the conference of the Associated Rural Women of the World at Washington, D. C

There were 27 women in the bus that left Garner, the latter part of May, and 20 of these women were from Hancock county, the largest delegation to leave from any county in the state According to those who reported on the trip it must have been interesting beyond expression of words.

Other numbers on the program included the Katter boys, Bobby, Jean and Alvin These youngsters dressed as Cowboys rendered several selections that were well received by the group Mr. Cook and Mr Oberhauser gave brief reports on the activities of the farm bureau organizations.

A lunch, consisting of lemonade, cake and sandwiches, was served by the refreshment committee.

Home From Hospital

John Christians brought his son Karsjen, home from the University hospital at Iowa City last Wednesday Karsjen, who is suffering with rheumatism took treatments at the hospital for three weeks. He will be required to wear a cast for six weeks when he will again return to the hospital for further treatment.

Boys From Orphanage Injured

Two boys, members of the Fort Wayne Orphans Home Band, who were at Clear Lake on a picnic Monday, were injured by a torpedo. The two boys had found a torpedo which had evidently failed to explode the Fouth. When they tossed it into one of the brick fire places at the park, the torpedo exploded at once, breaking the bricks into fragments which struck and injured one boy's knee. The other had small pieces of brick imbedded in his arm. The boys were brought to Klemme for medical attention.

R. N. A. WILL HAVE VACATION UNTIL SEPTEMBER MEETING

The ladies of the R. N .A. met at the hall Friday afternoon to take up matters of business. They voted to have a vacation until September.

Crochet That Is New and Quite Simple to Do

Pattern 5544

"Can anyone do it?" Most assuredly! It is a lovely rug, a matching foot-stool top or pillow for quick crocheting. Easy, six-sided medallions are done one by one, each flower a different color with background uniform or not, as you please. Sew them together and you're ready to begin the border crochet, going round and round with stripes of color used to break the background. Rug wool, rags or candlewicking may be used.

In pattern 5544 you will find complete instructions for making the rug shown; an illustration of it and of all stitches needed; material requirements; color suggestions.

Send 15 cents in coins or stamps (coins preferred) to The Sewing Circle, Household Arts Dept., 259 W. Fourteenth St., New York, N. Y. Write plainly pattern number, your name and address.

Glamorous Girls

For the polo matches, the races, and late afternoon occasions of summer in Paris, it is now the smart fashion to wear frocks and hats of the glamorous variety. Sheer fabrics like organdie are altogether enchanting and feminine for frocks with wide and sweeping skirts and hats with wide and flattering brims. These decorative full-skirted frocks with little capes or puffed sleeves have not by any means replaced the tailored evening costume with a jacket, an important fashion for parties from five o'clock on. Daylight dining will enhance this tailored idea. The idea of frocks-for-the-occasion grows increasingly important each fashion season, and French dressmakers have responded in a most charming manner.—Helen Koues in Good Housekeeping.

Floyd Gibbons Adventurers' Club Hello Everybody!

"Death Straddles the Fences"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

TODAY, boys and girls, Dave Sherin takes the floor. Dave lives in New York city. "I met with my adventure in Ireland," he writes, "and strange to say, it didn't have to do with the Black and Tan revolution or anything like that. I had my adventure with a horse."

A horse. That's the answer to almost anything in Dave's life. Dave doesn't remember the time when he wasn't on a horse and going somewhere. Back in 1924, when his adventure happened, he was a steeplechase rider. And a more dangerous sport doesn't exist, unless it's playing post office with a roomful of man-eating tigers.

Dave had been riding steeplechases and hurdle races for two years over in England when, one September day in 1924, he set out for Ireland for a two months' vacation and a whiff of good Limreick air.

His home was in Kilmallock, and he'd only been there a couple days when a neighboring farmer brought him a high-spirited, half-bred colt and asked Dave to break him to the saddle.

Unbroken Colt Has Wicked Gleam in His Eye.

"The horses I'd been dealing with for the two years before had all been full-blooded 'chasers,'" says Dave, "and I looked on this new horse as being a very soft job indeed. I was wrong. My first inkling of the mettle of that colt came the first time I entered the stable. I was no sooner inside than he began to lash out in all directions. He practically kicked me out the door.

"I decided then that he'd been spoiled by bad handling, and set about coaxing him into a better frame of mind. After a few days he seemed to respond to my efforts and I put the 'tack' or breaking-in equipment on him. By that time I had forgotten the first reception he gave me. I should have been warned, though, by the wicked gleam that was still in his eye."

Well, sir, Dave had the harness on him, and for a few days he let him buck all the hellishness out of his system around the corral. Then one day, he saddled the colt and took him for a canter. For all of three miles, that animal was gentle as a lamb. But finally they came to a field where three or four young horses were grazing, and the sight of those horses seemed to infuriate Dave's mount.

Dave Goes for a Wild Ride Upside Down.

"He quivered a moment," says Dave, "and pushed his head down as far as he could. Then, suddenly, he swung it sharply around, ending up with it under my right stirrup, and at the same moment he plunged sideways, to the left. His sudden action unseated me, and as my left foot slipped from its stirrup I fell across his back to leftward.

The Plunging Colt Headed for the Boundary Fence.

"But my right foot held fast in its stirrup, and there I was, slung at the furious animal's side, my right leg sticking up in the air and the back of my head hanging an inch from the ground."

And with Dave dangling at his side, standing on his head on empty air, that wild colt started. Off he went, hell-for-leather across the open field.

Dave's Cranium Bumps the Ground at Every Stride.

"At each long stride he took," says Dave, "my head hit the ground and his hoofs grazed my skull. I have never been in a tighter corner in my life, but strange to relate, my head remained clear and my thoughts connected. I knew he was heading for the boundary fence at the other side of the field, and I never expected to cross it alive. Dangling at his side as I was, I must inevitably hit that fence. Then, if I wasn't smashed lifeless, I'd be a lot tougher than I ever thought any human could be."

On the colt galloped, crossing that field in a length of time that was all too short to suit Dave. Now the fence loomed up before him. Now the colt was falling back on his haunches for the jump.

It all took place in the twinkling of an eye, but to Dave, whose mind was racing with the agony of the doomed, it seemed like slow motion. The colt rose into the air—and the incredible happened. That horse didn't jump that fence. He flew over it like a bird, carrying Dave's head well over the top of the barrier and letting it down on the other side.

Colt's Somersault Saves Rider's Life.

"Then we were in the open again," Dave says, "and he was galloping faster than ever. Across another fence and another he went, clearing them with room to spare every time. And still he kept on, as I swung under his belly, my head brushing the tops of the blades of grass and his hoofs beating a tattoo on the side of my cranium. Then, through the lashing legs I caught a glimpse of a solidly built wall ahead and knew that the most dangerous leap in County Limerick barred his way.

"It was a stone wall, five feet high that dropped away six feet on the other side to a dyke 20 feet across. It's all over now, I thought to myself, and I still remember that I forgot to say a prayer. Then the wall seemed to be rushing toward me and I could feel the colt bracing himself for a great effort. He rose in the air, and the last thing I remembered was a crash like a ton of bricks falling about my ears—"

Dave awoke three days later, and they told him of the miracle that had saved his life. The colt's front feet had struck the wall, and he had turned a complete somersault—the one sort of spill that could possibly have saved Dave.

Llama, Beast of Burden, Used by American Indian

The llama has the distinction of being the only beast of burden that the American Indians were in possession of when America was discovered, observes a writer in the Rural New-Yorker. The peculiar conformation of its feet enables it to tread with security over rough and steep slopes where other animals would find it difficult walking. And then, camel-like, it is capable of making long journeys without water.

The llama is not a fast traveler, for the average distance is from a dozen to 15 miles a day when transporting merchandise, as it is distinctly a beast of burden, yet it supplies the Indian of South America his supply of wool for clothing, fresh meat, though coarse, leather, bone and his fuel, as the manure when dry is burned.

Here is one very peculiar trait of the llama: He carries a burden of from 100 to 125 pounds. If he is overloaded, he simply resents the imposition by walking out to the side of the road, lies down, and there is no persuasion and no punishment that can be administered to him that will induce him to change his obstinate decision!

When you look at a llama, you are beholding one of the most interesting animals of history, for when the great Inca Empire flourished from the Maule River in Chile and the Oasis of Mendoza to the Northern Andes of Ecuador, the llama was their beast of burden.

THE RETURN OF PETEY

A CARRIER pigeon can be relied on to do the spectacular.

Glenn Butcher, doughboy of the Sixth infantry, after serving his country in France, established a pigeon farm near Lockport, Ill. Liking all pigeons, his greatest affection was reserved for a carrier named Petey.

Petey demonstrated once that Butcher's love was reciprocated. It was when an unidentified fiend visited Lockport, committed a score of crimes and concluded by stealing Petey and taking him to Chicago.

Butcher learned later the thief climbed to the top of the tallest building in Chicago, unfastened Petey and threw him overboard. Then, to show his fiendish nature, the kidnaper threw a wooden box at the falling bird.

The pigeon broke a leg in his 600-foot fall but retrieved the box, which landed nearby, and hobbled toward the river. There he produced a swagger stick Butcher had used in France, climbed on the box and, steering a winding course by means of the stick, started home.

Bulletins told of the pigeon navigator's progress, but Petey was too proud to accept aid. He negotiated the 45 miles of river channel alone in seven days, limping into Butcher's yard one morning, swagger stick under his wing. It not only gave him a jaunty appearance but served for a crutch as well.

AN 8-INCH TALE

SHELL games are not the only activity wherein the hand may be quicker than the eye.

So ruminates Buck Pyle, once of Clarendon, Texas, when he recalls the famous hunting trip undertaken by two of his father's ranch hands.

The cowboys, Sam and Henry, found buffalo tracks almost immediately. They spied two buffalo, and each fired at a different animal.

Henry's buffalo sped over a mountain range with Henry in close pursuit and was lost to view. Sam wounded his game and the injured buffalo charged. His pony wheeled, slipped into the deep grass and unseated the rider.

Sam rose to a sitting position, terrified at the approach of the huge animal. He ducked just as the charging buffalo hurtled past, then he straightened suddenly, grasped the wounded buffalo by the tail and hung on.

He could not hope to subdue the maddened beast, but neither could the animal attack him. So Sam clung to the buffalo's eight-inch tail until just before the wild runner crossed the Mexican boundary. Then he reached out with a poplar tree he'd gathered en route, tickled the buffalo's nose and turned him back.

When Sam had guided the buffalo in this fashion until they reached Donley county, Henry rode up and rescued his friend.

The regrettable effect of the incident, says Pyle, is that Sam won't accept a buffalo nickel now, even if you offer him three for a dime.

THE EXTENDED PALM

A GREATER number of extended palms can be found in the state of Florida than in all of France.

One of them, a royal palm, grows in front of the ninth green of the De Leon Springs golf course, its foliage frequently catching balls pitched toward the green.

That happened to John H. Fisher of Chicago the first time he stepped on the De Leon Springs links to try for his usual 76. The ball lodged in the tree and only the gift of a 59-cent dollar persuaded his colored caddie to retrieve it.

Climbing to the top of the tree the caddie gave one vigorous shake and Fisher's ball and 376 other golf balls dropped. It was the first time the royal palm had been shaken.

The golfer was astonished to discover that thirteen of the balls had his name printed on them.

"It was my initial visit to Florida, all right, but that was no reason my entire name should have been printed on the balls," Fisher said later. "I didn't discover why until four months afterwards.

"I play the Tam o'Shanter course at Chicago. On the fifth tee I invariably slice my drive frequently losing the ball. Well, I began to analyze my shots off that tee, employing a compass and other research equipment.

"And I discovered a most interesting thing—every one of my sliced shots off that fifth tee moved in a curving line directly toward De Leon Springs from Chicago."

Early Strikes in America

The first recorded strike in America took place in 1741, when New York bakers quit work as a protest against a municipal ordinance regulating the price of bread. The earliest known strike for higher wages took place in 1786, when the Philadelphia printers ceased work as a means of enforcing their demand for a minimum weekly wage of $6. The first organized strike in America took place in 1799, when the shoemakers belonging to the Federal Society of Journeymen Cordwainers, were compelled to lay down their tools in order to aid the bootmakers who were seeking an increase in wages.

Uncommon Sense

By JOHN BLAKE

© Bell Syndicate—WNU Service.

Make up your mnd that it is senseless to quarrel.

You will meet many people that you dislike.

At Least Tolerate Your Neighbor

Many of them will be quarrelsome, conceited, ill tempered. Avoid such people, but tolerate them. They may turn out to be better than you think they are.

There is plenty of room on this earth for human beings of all sorts and kind.

Some of them will differ with you in politics, others in religion.

Some may be downright ugly.

But they are as they are made. Quarreling with them will make you unhappy, and you're going to need all the happiness you can find as you travel through life.

* * *

Some of them may be snobbish and "high hat". You can easily keep away from that sort.

But you will be thrown in with certain people whom you cannot avoid.

They may live next door to you, they may belong to the same church or club, they may intrude themselves upon you in many unpleasant ways.

It will do you no good to "get your back up" when they are around.

You will get only misery out of quarreling with them.

Just convince yourself that there must be that kind of people in the world with you, and that the easiest way is to be as cheerful as possible in their presence, eschew arguments with them, and let them go their own way.

* * *

You can kill mosquitoes and spiders and rattlesnakes and other creatures with which you may be thrown as you go on.

You can't kill human beings without getting into serious trouble. I do not contend that you ought to nurse odious people in your bosom, or try to reform them.

All I suggest is that if you must be with them you will not be unhappy about it, but get along as well you can.

And now and then you are pretty sure to find that somebody you thought was a pest was a really good sort when you came to know him well, and that you lost a good deal by not getting better acquainted with him.

Dislike reacts on the person who harbors it. Better find that wherever you go you find men and women who constant irritations to you.

Leave them alone if you can't, just be civil pleasant and if they resent keep out of their neighborhood.

The chief end of man I hope ly believe is happiness.

You can't be happy when are hating other people.

But toleration will put it out their power to annoy you.

Try this plan for a couple weeks. I think you will profit it.

All Around the House

Do not remove husks from green corn until just before putting on to boil. Corn spoils quickly, so it should be used as soon as possible after purchasing.

Sandwiches may be kept moist for 24 hours if they are wrapped tight as soon as made, in waxed paper, then placed in a box lined with a damp cloth and covered with a cloth. Keep in a cool place.

Never put hot foods in your refrigerator or ice box. Wait until they have cooled.

Always strain hot fat used for deep frying through a piece of cheese cloth each time it is used and set in a cool place. Treated in this way fat may be used many times.

Virginia Celebrates Patrick Henry Bi-Centennial

Gentry of Hanover, Va., gather to map out a scene in "Liberty or Death," a spectacular pageant which will be presented July 15, 16 and 17, marking the bi-centennial of the birth of Patrick Henry. Inset depicts Patrick Henry as a boy, when with hounds and gun he led many a chase over the Hanover fields and woods. In the pageant, milestones in the life of the great Virginian will be dramatized. The story will include Henry's rise to immediate fame after his speech in a celebrated case known as the "Parson's Cause" when, as an obscure lawyer, he boldly denied the right of King George III to abrogate the acts of the colonial legislature. His famous "Give me liberty or give me death" speech, his career as a soldier in the Revolutionary war and his services to Virginia and the nation as governor and statesman will be depicted.

Imports Displace 33 Million Acres

New Deal Aids Foreigners to Steal Home Market From U. S. Farmers.

Washington, D. C.—Imports of foreign farm products, aided by the Roosevelt crop reduction and free trade policies, displaced 33,436,336 acres of American farm land during the year 1935 alone, an analysis of the department of commerce reports over that year reveal. This is approximately one and one-half times the amount of land in cultivation in Iowa, a leading agricultural state.

This estimate is based upon the ten-year average yield of the acreage necessary to the production of the same crop in the United States. It is also estimated that the United States rural population denied the opportunity for self-support by the 1935 importations is 1,741,000 persons. This does not include the 1,000,000 southern share croppers and farm hands thrown out of work because of the administration's cotton curtailment program.

Pork Imports Leap Up.

Imports all down the line—grains, meats, hops, milk, butter, eggs, vegetable oils and their substitutes, lard substitutes, edible molasses and many others—have multiplied, in some cases fifty or 100 times, under the New Deal.

In the first four months of 1936 the United States consumed 10,151,102 pounds of foreign pork, almost seven times the volume imported in the first four months of last year, and more than twenty times the imports of two years ago. The rapid rise of pork imports was accompanied by a large increase in live hog imports. In the four months the United States received 5,180,576 pounds of live hogs, as compared with only 35,953 pounds in the corresponding period a year ago, and 2,800 pounds two years ago.

Canned Meat Imports Soar.

Hog raisers fear that these big imports will eventually cause a collapse of home markets similar to that which occurred in cattle, although production in this country is yet far below the requirements of the nation. American producers have lost many millions of dollars of trade to the foreign farmers as a result of the scarcity program adopted three years ago. In four months meat valued at $7,951,000 was brought in from other countries. April imports amounted to more than $2,000,000. Two years ago they were $350,000.

Canned meat imports rose to 34,807,453 pounds this year, compared with 25,613,601 a year ago and 9,718,137 two years ago.

Col. Knox Is Energetic Foe of Administration

Chicago, Ill.—Col. Frank Knox, Chicago newspaper publisher nominated as Gov. Alf M Landon's running mate on the Republican ticket in the November elections, is no exception to the unity of purpose which has characterized the Republican convention in Cleveland and the campaign itself.

Determined to campaign vigorously as a candidate for the vice-presidency, Col. Knox wired Gov. Landon: "I gladly place myself under your orders and will undertake to discharge every assignment you give me with all the vigor and ability I possess. We go forward to victory."

Deficit in Terms of Gold

Hamilton Bares New Deal Fears

Sees 'Victory for America' This Fall, in Speech at Chicago.

CHICAGO, ILL.—John D. M. Hamilton, new chairman of the Republican National committee, opened the Republican Presidential election campaign in the West with a ringing, straightforward declaration of the misdeeds of the Roosevelt administration and its fear of obliteration which the public recognition of these misdeeds has produced.

His speech was delivered at a dinner given him by the Republican Finance committee for Illinois. As he finished upon the note: "There can be only one outcome in November—a victory for America!" the more than 3,000 listeners cheered wildly. It was the largest political dinner in Chicago's history; 1,200 were turned away.

In the early passages of his speech, Hamilton dwelt upon the "phoney" character of the claimed New Deal confidence in re-election, and endorsement of its candidate—confidence he said was unreliable for the very fact that it has been bought with payroll jobs and the taxpayers' money

Points to Farley's Fears.

Hamilton also cited the futile imitations of the Republican platform advocated by President Roosevelt with respect to the Democratic monopoly plank, the civil service plank and the plank on balancing the budget. He characterized these imitations as sincere flattery.

"There has been a sudden end to the talk that the Republican party would carry only six states in November," Hamilton declared. "On the contrary, the chairman of the Democratic National committee felt obliged to tell the delegates to the Philadelphia convention that confidence was not enough And in the last few days supporters of the administration have been disheartened by the extraordinary spectacle of their candidate for President so uncertain of carrying his own state that he must draft the aid of a governor, whom he himself placed in office, at the sacrifice of that man's own personal preferences and political future."

Hamilton expressed sympathy for James A. Farley, "jobmaster general of the New Deal," declaring: "He has undertaken to see that his candidates are re-elected in November and quite plainly he doesn't know how it can be done."

The G. O. P. chairman said the administration's claims for its agricultural policy were singularly modest.

Betrayal of Farmer.

"It neglects," he said, "to mention the extraordinary increase in importations of farm products, which are most certainly directly attributable to the Roosevelt administration. It neglects to say that from 1932 to 1935 imports of raw foodstuffs increased 41 per cent and of manufactured foodstuffs 49 per cent. It neglects to state that in that period importations of wheat jumped from three thousand bushels to over twenty-seven million bushels; and imports of corn jumped from 344 thousand bushels to over 43 million bushels; that imports of rice went from 19 to 52 million pounds."

Hamilton predicted that citizens would not be fooled out of realizing the excessive burden of taxes. "They will note the perfectly correct horror with which Mr. Roosevelt views gambling with other people's money, but at the same time they will note he fails to mention the gambling in which irresponsible New Deal officials have indulged, not only with our money but with money which our children will have to produce."

GOOD NEWS FOR ANGLERS

A partial report, made by W E. Aitken, biologist for the Conservation Commission, of a survey of northwestern lakes for the purpose of determining the wealth of minnow and fish food life, indicates that water conditions have produced an increased population of minnows in the majority of lakes In addition to the improved condition for minnows which in turn aids fishing the bug life existent in these lakes is better than has been reported for many years This is particularly true of daphnia and water fleas Aitken reports tons of bug life may be found near the shores of most lakes

The small animal life in its abundance creates an ideal condition for minnows as these small fish depend upon bug life for their food The minnows in turn furnish food to game fish and reduce canabalism All in all, Aitken reports that fishing conditions should improve during the coming year if all other factors remain normal or become improved

FISHING GOOD DESPITE HEAT

Reports reaching the Conservation Commission and observations that were made by Conservation Officers indicate that the temperatures above the century mark for several days have had no effect on the fishing Ordinarily when the water gets warm the fish are sluggish, particularly during the period of the shad fly hatch and for several days following

Most affected by these conditions is the wall-eyed pike but not so this year With the first shad fly hatch over and the water extremely warm the wall-eyed pike fishing remains good in the major lakes of northwestern Iowa Most fishermen report catching several and many report the limit Still fishing and trolling with minnows are equally successful and many are taken on artificial lures when fished properly

Examination of numerous wall eye stomachs show them empty so apparently the fish are hungry Silver bass are also being taken in good numbers in the north and northwest regions

GENERAL PERSHING

General John J Pershing now 75 years old, has had perhaps the most remarkable career of any American soldier of his generation and although retired from the Army since 1924 is still active as chairman of the American battle monuments commission

Born in Linn County, Missouri, he was graduated from West Point in 1886, gaining his first actual experience in battle the same year in the Apache Indian campaign He served in the Sioux war of 1890-91, in the Santiago campaign of 1898, and distinguished himself in successful campaigns against the Moro in the Phillipines, for which he was promoted from captain to brigadier general

He commanded the [illegible] sent into Mexico in pursuit of Villa in 1916 and at the outbreak of the World War was placed in command of the American Expeditionary Forces in France For his distinguished services in the war he was made General of the Armies of the United States, a rank created for him by Congress in 1919 He also received the highest military decorations from all the Allied nations

General Pershings life has been marked by man hardships and at least one great sorrow His wife and three children were burned to death in a fire at the Presidio of San Francisco on August 27, 1915, while he was absent from the post on duty Mrs Pershing was the daughter of Senator Warren of Wyoming

During his long career General Pershing has served his country with extraordinary distinction, and his fellow citizens will wish for him many more years in which to enjoy the well-earned honors which have been bestowed upon him.

OVERLOADING BOATS MADE UNLAWFUL BY COMMISSION

The Conservation Commission, at its meeting held July 7th, amended the boat regulations to include a provision making it unlawful for any person or persons offering a boat for hire or renting a boat to use to permit said boat to be occupied by more passengers and crew than the licensed capacity of the boat.

Each boat offered for rent must be inspected and a metal tag affixed indicating the number of persons it may carry

The Commission felt the need for such a regulation due to the widespread practice of persons who rent a boat and then go around a point or hidden portion of the lake and loading in several more passenders than the number permitted by law The Commission is endeavoring to reduce the number of drownings in this manner.

100,000 to See Landon Notified

Day of Celebration Planned July 23 to Honor Nominee.

TOPEKA, KAS.—Tens of thousands of prairie state Americans, joined by additional thousands of visitors from every section of the United States, will gather on the grounds of the state house here Thursday, July 23, to hear Alf M. Landon accept the Republican nomination for President.

The quiet, businesslike governor, who balanced the budget of Kansas by simple economy, in his speech of acceptance, to be broadcast nationally, will tell the American people how he proposes to handle the problems of government.

Day-Long Celebration.

Topekans, under the leadership of their chamber of commerce, have arranged a program of pageantry which will last from noon until nearly midnight. Indian ceremonies, parades and a giant fireworks display will portray the spirit and history of Kansas, and voice the "typical prairie" states' approval of Alf Landon.

At the Kansas state fairgrounds 20 tribes of Indians will conduct a ceremonial barbecue at noon in the colorful setting provided by their villages of tepees. Haskell Indians from Lawrence, Kas, and groups from Marietta, will unite with other Indians from points as far-removed as New York and Arizona to smoke the pipe of peace with the Republican nominee.

100,000 Can View Ceremonies.

A triple parade, lasting an hour and a half, will march down Kansas avenue to the state house, beginning at 4 p. m.

"More than 10,000 Landon boosters are being marshalled to participate in the parade," said Robert M. Owthwaite, president of the Topeka chamber. "Their line of march will be decorated with sunflowers, for as the sunflower was planted by the early pioneers to guide those who followed to their destination in safety, so is the Landon sunflower destined to show the way back to the security of the American form of government."

The notification ceremonies will take place on the south steps of the state house, where 100,000 persons will be able to see Gov. Landon against the background of the building from which he has sprung to fame with the swiftness and power of a prairie cyclone.

Drouth Emphasizes Folly of New Deal 'Scarcity'

Chicago, Ill. — Drouth disaster, plus artificial crop restricton, for the second time in three years is demonstrating the fallacy of the New Deal theory of "economic scarcity," writes Frank Ridgway, agricultural editor of the Chicago Tribune.

Ridgway declared that it was difficult for many to believe crops again are being destroyed so that farmers can qualify for payments under the new federal soil law, when the country is faced with a shortage of human foods and livestock feeds, and foreign grown farm products are being imported into the United States in increasing amounts.

"Farmers have a feeling of protest against being forced to clip or pasture their green oats to prevent them from maturing a crop of seed, or to plow under tons of green soy beans that would make needed food for live stock this winter," Ridgway said. He cited some instances of Illinois farmers who decided not to plow under their soy beans to receive government checks for $12 an acre when they could make $15 an acre by harvesting the beans and selling them.

Predicts G. O. P. Sweep to Majority in House

Chicago, Ill.—The steady trend toward Landon and Knox throughout the country will help sweep a Republican majority into the house of representatives at the approaching election, says Earl Venable, executive secretary of the Republican Congressional campaign committee with offices here

"We will retain all the seats we now have," said Mr. Venable, 'and from among the remainder, now represented by Democrats who came in on the 1932 landslide, a sufficient number can be swung back to give the Republicans a comfortable majority in the new house, which will support Landon after his election."

Exports Drop Under New Deal

Washington, D. C.—During President Roosevelt's administration, cotton exports decreased 33 per cent, lard exports 83 per cent and wheat exports 99 per cent, according to department of commerce reports.

President Roosevelt Is Renominated by Acclaim

PRESIDENT FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT was renominated by unanimous acclaim by the Democratic National convention in Philadelphia, receiving the convention's entire 1,100 votes on the first ballot. Vice President John N. Garner was likewise renominated for that position by acclaim.

At a great public massmeeting in Franklin field, Philadelphia, attended by 110,000 people on the evening of the convention's adjournment, President Roosevelt and Vice President Garner were officially notified of their selection and responded with acceptance speeches.

The President sounded the battle-cry of his campaign for re-election by denouncing "economic royalists who hide behind the American flag and Constitution."

President Roosevelt

The convention unanimously adopted a strong New Deal platform and voted the abolition of the historic two-thirds rule.

The sessions were marked with extreme enthusiasm. Party harmony and a determination to stand militantly on the administration's record in the past three years and present a united front in the coming campaign characterized the convention.

The abolition of the two-thirds rule for the nomination of candidates was one of the significant achievements. This rule, which has been in use for more than 100 years, was superseded by the adoption of the rules committee's report recommending that at future conventions only a bare majority be required for nomination. While some southern and the eastern and western states opposed abrogation, they were reconciled to it by the committee's recommendation that changes be made in the apportionment of delegates.

The platform pledged continuance of soil conservation, benefit payments to farmers, a sound currency, a balanced budget and a constitutional amendment if necessary, to achieve the party's broad social program. It praised the accomplishments of the New Deal in a preamble, declaring that it planned to continue them in the interest of the nation. The platform's keynote was that the Roosevelt administration has put and will keep the nation "on the road to recovery and prosperity."

Regarding the Constitution, the platform declared that while the Republican platform proposes to meet national problems by action of the separate states, the Democratic party recognizes that minimum wages, maximum hours, child labor, monopolistic and unfair business practices, dust storms, drouth and floods could not be handled by states. It stated:

"If these problems cannot be effectively solved by legislation within the Constitution, we shall seek such clarifying amendments as will assume to the legislatures of the several states and to the congress of the United States each within it proper jurisdiction, the power to enact those laws which the state and federal legislatures within their respective spheres shall find necessary, in order adequately to regulate commerce, protect public health and safety and safeguard economic security. Thus we propose to maintain the letter and spirit of the Constitution."

In addition to soil conservation and benefit payments, the farm plank pledged the Democrats to financing share-croppers and tenants in buying lands; favored commodity loans on farm surpluses and retirement of ten million acres of submarginal land from production and rural rehabilitation.

Railway Pension Acts Declared Unconstitutional

PENSIONS for railway workers received a setback when the District of Columbia Supreme court ruled unconstitutional two acts passed by congress last year.

The court held that the government had no right to levy or collect taxes to finance the rail pensions and invalidated as "inseparable" a companion tax measure providing for payment of the pensions.

Both acts were passed last year under the sponsorship of the administration and with the support of railway labor leaders after the United States Supreme court had held unconstitutional the 1934 railway retirement act. They were designed to meet the high court's objections.

One of the measures involved levies upon railroads and an excise tax of three and one-half per cent "of the compensation not in excess of $300 per month paid to its employees." Workers would have paid a three and one-half per cent income tax upon their wages not in excess of $300 per month. The money thus collected would go into a pension fund. The other act established the retirement system for employees at the age of sixty-five, with pensions ranging up to $120 per month.

Farm Income Up 90 Per Cent, A. A. A. Report Sets Forth

AN INCREASE of 90 per cent in the cash farm income on cotton, wheat, tobacco, corn and hogs from 1932 to 1935 was recorded under the Agricultural Adjustment act, invalidated by the Supreme court last January, according to the annual report of Chester C. Davis, former administrator, made public in Washington.

Chester Davis

Cash farm income from these five major farm products which came under production control, rental and benefit payments was $1,365,000,000 in 1932, the year before the AAA became operative. For 1935 it was $2,593,000,000.

The report pointed out that cash farm income from all other products increased in the same period from $3,012,000,000 to $4,307,000,000.

Mr. Davis, who was recently appointed by President Roosevelt to the Federal Reserve board, declared that cash available for living expenses, taxes and interest from farm cash income was the highest in 1935 since 1929, and two and one-half times greater than it was in 1932.

Under the AAA, the report sets forth, rental and benefit payments accounted for one-fourth of the increase in all cash farm income from $4,377,000,000 in 1932 to $6,900,000,000 in 1935.

Gov. Landon Makes Plans for Notification Speech

IN ESTES PARK, Colo., Gov. Alfred M. Landon, Republican Presidential nominee, continued his vacation begun with his family the week before and made plans for reconvening of the Kansas legislature and for the acceptance speech he will deliver in Topeka on July 23.

Gov. Landon

Although Governor Landon was resting preparatory to the rigors of the campaign, affairs of his state and conferences with political advisers occupied considerable of his attention.

When the Kansas legislature reconvenes a proposed amendment to the state constitution will be introduced, giving the state broad power to provide far-reaching legislation for social welfare and to co-operate with the federal government. Governor Landon was quoted as describing the proposed amendment as "satisfactory."

The amendment, which may be the basis for similar action in other states, reads:

"Nothing contained in this constitution shall be construed to limit the power of the legislature to enact laws providing for financial assistance to aid infirm or dependent persons; for the public health; unemployment compensation and general social security and providing for the payment thereof by tax or otherwise and to receive aid from the federal government therefor."

Charles P. Taft and Ralph W Robey, two members of his research and advisory staff, were scheduled to join the Republican Presidential nominee and to provide him with further data for the notification ceremony speech—the first major political statement since his Cleveland nomination.

In the meantime, John Hamilton, newly elected chairman of the Republican National committee was on a tour of the East conferring with political leaders.

Strikes in Provinces Continue French Unrest

PERSISTENCE of strikes in the provinces kept France in a state of unrest. A gain of 225,000 new members was reported by the general confederation of labor, organized labor's official body.

Altogether it was estimated that 100,000 workers were still absent from their jobs, in spite of reports of strike settlements in scattered sections throughout the country.

The French Riviera witnessed a general exodus of foreign tourists from 450 hotels and resorts following a lockout by the proprietors. The hotels were closed indefinitely after the employers declared they could not meet workers' demands for more pay and shorter hours. This retaliation by the owners against the threat of a workers' strike upset the summer tourist season, one of the most profitable to the French.

Severe Drouth Damage Brings Federal Action

WITH thousands of acres of spring wheat destroyed through drouth and with vast corn-growing regions threatened, the federal government undertook a comprehensive campaign to alleviate human distress and property loss, and stricken areas were placed in the hands of a special drouth committee by Secretary of Agriculture Wallace, with instructions to proceed immediately with a plan of co-ordination.

Secretary Wallace named Jess W. Tapp, assistant agricultural adjustment administrator, as chairman of the committee. Four others appointed were: C. W. Warburton, director of the Agricultural Extension Service: Hugh H. Bennett, chief of the Soil Conservation Service; A. G. Black, chief of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics; and W. F. Callender, assistant agricultural adjustment administrator. Joseph L. Bailey, assistant resettlement administrator, will also serve with the committee.

The committee's attention was turned immediately to drouth conditions and relief need in North Dakota, South Dakota, Minnesota, Montana and Wyoming, but officials were watching anxiously the increasing drouth damage in South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee and parts of Kentucky, Alabama, Mississippi and Arkansas.

The work of six government agencies will be supervised and co-ordinated by the committee in its work on drouth relief. These are: the Agricultural Adjustment Administration, the Public Works Administration, the Federal Surplus Commodities corporation, the Rural Resettlement Administration, the Relief Administration, and Rural Rehabilitation and Soil Conservation Service.

League of Nations Meets to Lift Sanctions

WHILE representatives of leading powers gathered in Geneva to lift League of Nations economic sanctions against Italy and the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, of Ethiopia prepared to plead the cause of his nation's freedom, European statesmen considered the possibility of a reorganization and reformation of the League.

Haile Selassie

Observers agreed that while informal discussions on the League reformation would be held, it was probable that the question of reorganizing the international pact body would be postponed until September.

Steel Industry Resists Drive for Unionization

DEFYING a drive to force unionization of its 500,000 workers, the steel industry in a strongly worded statement issued by the American Iron and Steel institute declared "it will oppose any attempt to compel its employees to join a union or pay tribute for the right to work."

Although the statement did not mention him by name, it was regarded by observers as the first official response to the recent announcement by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, of a campaign to unionize steel employees.

In order to prevent the "closed shop," the industry said it "will use its resources to the best of its ability to protect its employees and their families from intimidation, coercion and violence and to aid them in maintaining collective bargaining free from interference from any source."

Reasserting its belief in the principles of collective bargaining, the industry's statement pointed out that employees now pick their own representatives for collective bargaining by secret ballot. The statement declares:

"The steel industry is recovering from six years of depression and huge losses and the employees are beginning to receive the benefit of increased operations. Any interruption of the forward movement will seriously injure the employees and their families and all business dependent upon the industry and will endanger the welfare of the country."

International Conference Seeks Mediterranean Peace

MEETING in Montreaux, Switzerland, an international conference sought settlement of military and naval problems in the Mediterranean. The conference had been called by the powers as a result of Turkey's request to fortify the Dardanelles, which were demilitarized under the Lausanne treaty of 1923.

The possible threat of Russia's growing naval strength caused an alignment of the British and Japanese. Japan announced it was willing to accept any limitation on Japanese warships authorized to enter the Black sea, providing similar restrictions were placed on Russian warships leaving it. Britain was believed to be supporting Japan's position.

Russia demanded free westward passage of warships and submarines out of the Black sea through the Dardanelles, adding she was unable to see why other powers not bordering on this body of water desired unlimited passage to it.

"Stomach Periscope" May Permit Early Cancer Diagnosis

Flexible New Tube "Sees" by Means of Forty-Six Lenses

KANSAS CITY — An instrument that might be called a stomach periscope may be the means of preventing many cases of stomach cancer. It was shown at the scientific exhibit of the American Medical association here.

The instrument, a flexible tube called a gastroscope, for looking inside the stomach, was designed by Dr. Rudolf Schindler of Chicago and his colleagues, Drs. Marie Ortmayer and John F. Renshaw.

The flexibility of the instrument gives it a tremendous advantage over the earlier style of rigid gastroscope. Made of flexible metal, covered with rubber, it contains 46 hand-ground lenses on the inside. At the end of the two and a half foot tube is a small light. The tube is no larger around than one's finger.

Sees in All Directions.

Because of its flexibility it can be bent backward and to the side or in any direction, thus enabling the physician to see every part of the stomach. This was not possible with the old model rigid gastroscope.

Doctor Schindler, in showing it to physicians, held a book at one end and turned the tube in all directions, but the person looking through the tube could read the printed page no matter how the tube was bent.

Advantage Over X-Ray

The patient experiences no discomfort and there is no danger of injury with this instrument. The patient's throat is anesthetized, the tube is passed down it, and the examination of the stomach is made in a minute or two. This can be done in the doctor's office and the patient is able afterward to go on to his work. One patient had the tube passed into his stomach 65 times.

This instrument gives far more accurate information about the condition of the stomach than even the X-ray. With it the physician will be able to detect not only the presence of cancer, but the amount of cancer present and whether it is an operable type.

Electrical Hotbed Helps Truck Farmer Speed Plant Growth

MAGNOLIA, ARK. — Like many truck farmers Charles J Gault near here worried about preseason competition from the warmer Rio Grande area.

Now his problem is solved by the use of an electrical hotbed capable of growing 1,000,000 plants and having a total area of one-tenth of an acre.

Temperature Changes.

Eight thousand feet of soil-heating cable are used in eight covered beds. Temperatures of from 50 to 60 degrees Fahrenheit can be maintained in the ground when outside temperatures are as low as 15 or 20 degrees. The air temperature of the beds ranged from 40 to 60 degrees.

Brain Injuries Change Methods of Learning

EVANSTON, ILL. — How injuries to the brain may interfere with learning is indicated by experiments with rats reported to the Midwestern Psychological association here by Dr. I Krechevsky, of the University of Chicago.

The manner in which learning takes place in the injured animals was the subject of the study rather than their ability to solve any given problem.

The injured animals tend to do the same thing over and over and to lack versatility or variety in their response even though the injury may be a relatively minor one.

They also show a loss of ability to work out some general method of attack for a problem. According to an analysis of the normal learning process previously made by Drs Krechevsky and E C Tolman, of the University of California, these two factors are all-important—first the ability to hit upon some generalized mode of attack for the problem and second a versatility or plasticity that will enable the individual to try first one possible solution and then another until the best answer is found.

Roaming Habits of Bats Being Closely Studied by Science

Old Fears of Vampires Being Rapidly Banished

LOOK out for bats!

No, that is not a warning. It is an invitation.

Naturalists have concluded that bats are entirely too mysterious. Until recently, nobody has followed their flight, trailing the flying mammals to learn where and how they roam. Nobody can say whether bats are faithful to the same home apartment year after.

So, the habits of an animal that naturalists find fascinating are being studied for science. And if the public in the region of the experiment can get over old spooky fears of vampires and other wild bat tales, it can help, too.

Bats Are Banded.

Nearly 3,000 bats of six species have been banded in Vermont and Massachusetts, and over 700 of these marked bats have been re-captured, Donald R. Griffin of Barnstable, Mass., has reported to the American Society of Mammalogists.

By fastening an aluminum band around the leg of over 600 bat inhabitants in two Vermont caves, Mr. Griffin identified the tenants. Returning the next winter, he proved that at least 37 per cent of these bats returned to their own winter cave. From this experiment and similar studies in Germany, he believes that most bats hibernating in these caves return successive winters, for many banded bats in the caves eluded capture, and many more undoubtedly failed to return because of death.

Have Homing Instinct.

It is not so certain that bats return as tenaciously to summer roosts. Mr. Griffin could re-capture only about 11.5 per cent of his banded bats at Cape Cod summer colonies, but catching bats is harder at roosts than in caves, he finds.

Bats have a homing instinct similar to that of birds, the naturalist reported. One returned when released from a ship at sea, 36 miles from its roost.

World Affairs to Be Handled by Continents, Geographer Predicts

WASHINGTON. — Four nations only—the Federation of the Americas, the Republic of Africa, the Dominion of Europe and the United States of Asia—may well be the names of the ultimate political make-up of the world of the future.

Looking into the world's future, a geographer has predicted that continents rather than nations, are destined to become the units of politics.

How present signs point to geographic alliances as more successful than racial bonds, was stressed by Dr. Luis Sanchez Ponton of Mexico, speaking before the Pan-American Institute of Geography and History meeting here.

The mingling of races in the United States, unified by the land they live in, was cited by Doctor Sanchez as an example of successful experiment. Furthermore, as neighbors on the great continent. Spanish-America and Anglo-Saxon America have found the geographic factor a bond that strengthens co-operation.

No bright future for such programs as Pan-Islamism, Pan-Germanism, and Pan-Slavism is seen by Doctor Sanchez.

'Recent history," he added, "indicates that these movements have not been successful."

The present trend toward a world organized by continents is traced to an origin in the industrial revolution. Since then trade and manufacture have bulked large in national friendships and alliances.

Plant Breeder Crosses Quack Grass With Wheat

WASHINGTON. — Quack grass, hated in this country as a noxious weed, has been hybridized with wheat by a Russian plant breeder, Dr. H. B. Tzitsin, the Tass agency here has been informed.

The new grain grows perennially, like its quack-grass parent. This would presumably give it the double advantage of not having to be sown every year, and of covering and binding the soil against erosion with a continuous mat of roots.

Small-scale experiments with the hybrid grain indicate that it will yield more flour, bushel for bushel, than "straight" wheat. Bread baked from the hybrid grain flour is said to be of good quality and flavor.

Another of Doctor Tzitsin's hybrid wheats combines four wheat varieties in its pedigree, and is declared to be a phenomenally heavy yielder, one stalk producing as many as 400 grains. Still another hybrid wheat has been evolved for growing in the short-summered North; its grain can be matured in as little as 67 days.

shington.—The arrival of the robin does not guarantee the immediate arrival of spring but when the first robin is observed, folks rally consider that there is lit- ft of winter. An out and out by an individual in party poli- likewise does not guarantee rtant defections, but, like the al of the early robin, an indi- l bolter, if he be a man of quence, has a story of its own ll. A bolt in party politics attracts attention unless the g individual is of some con- nce and, therefore, has a per- following. Thus it is that we observe a bolt by a na- ly known individual from his g political affiliation, we im- ately understand its signifi- . The scope of this signifi- , however, is the thing that rns us.

e Smith Bolt

arly everyone knows now that er Gov. Alfred E. Smith of York, Democratic Presiden- nominee in 1928, has made n that he cannot support Pres- Roosevelt for re-election. know as well that the four individuals who asked the ocratic National convention to Mr Roosevelt aside and nom- a Democrat can be classified portant individuals along with rnor Smith. No one dare say former Sen. James A. Reed issouri, former Governor Ely assachusetts, Bainbridge Col- ecretary of state in Woodrow n's administration and Daniel Cohalan, one time Tam- chieftain, are unimportant in cs. They have consistently d in Democratic party coun- and thus it becomes appar- hat these five robins presage thing more than just their departure from the ranks of evelt supporters.

nake this statement notwith- ng the declaration by James arley that he would not digni- ir statement with a reply. Of e, Mr. Farley as postmaster al, chairman of the Demo- National committee, chair- of the New York State Demo- committee and delegate to Democratic National conven- necessarily was a very busy at the time the Smith state- , refusing support to President evelt, was released for publi- n. Nevertheless, I am in a ion to know that the Smith ment threw quite a scare into Deal ranks. Frankly, they ot like it w much they do not like the statement remains to be I believe that no one can ast exactly how much gth this group can pull away Mr. Roosevelt in the Novem- election. Much will depend their personal activities forth. If men like Smith and Reed and Ely take the stump. ey go out onto the hustings actually campaign for Gover- Landon, the Republican nomi- it seems to me obvious that campaigning will damage the evelt cause materially.

was the natural strategy for Farley to follow in declining ment on the Smith defection. ssertion that the Smith state- was so unimportant as to re- no reply will be convincing very great many voters who dy have made up their minds pport Mr. Roosevelt. But the is that the election has not won yet by either side and votes that are influenced by a group as that headed by rnor Smith will have weight in nal determination of our next dent.

Smith defection becomes the important in my opinion be- cause it occurred almost simultane- ously with the de- velopment of a party under the leadership ep. William Lemke, of North ta. This picture may not be ely clear to everyone. It is antially this: Lemke and his agues are attempting to draw her the extreme radicals, the t groups. The bulk of these come from the Democratic if the Lemke organization de- s any particular strength. Smith group represents the rvative, or rightist, element e Democratic party. Thus we detraction from the Roosevelt gth on two sides.

Lemke 3rd Party

o not mean to say here that combination of these circum- es will insure President evelt's defeat. Anyone who d make such a declaration at ime demonstrates his lack of ledge of political maneuvers. I am seeking to show, how- is that robins have arrived in back yard and in the front of the New Deal party and if eaders of the two obstreperous ps engage viciously in this paign, the time may come when Mr. Farley will recognize their importance.

There already has been evidence of the influence of the Lemke radical segment. I think everyone agrees that the announcement of the third party's organization vitally affected the type of platform that was written in Washington and adopted by the Democratic convention at Philadelphia. From many sources comes information that the Democratic platform was made much more liberal—some critics describe it as more socialistic—than would have been the case had Representative Lemke stayed out of the political picture. He has the backing of Father Coughlin, the Detroit radio priest, and his national union for social justice and he has the backing of the remnants of the late Huey Long's share-the-wealth adherents. In addition, the Townsend $200-a-month pension followers will be found behind Lemke to some extent.

I have observed these third party movements many times before and usually they have failed to live up to expectations. They nearly always have developed fights among themselves because the very nature of and the very reason for their existence lies in their varied conceptions of what government ought to be or ought to do. Their sincerity precludes them usually from compromise and when politicians refuse to compromise, their organization, whatever it may be, naturally disintegrates.

This may be the year when the leftist segment will stick together and if it does, it naturally threatens Mr. Roosevelt's success. I confidently expect to see overtures seeping out from New Deal sources in an effort to placate some of the Lemke followers. It is a logical piece of strategy for the New Dealers to seek to wean these recalcitrant folks from the third party.

The European disturbances continue apace. It is a situation that is extremely interesting and one that probably will unfold as the weeks go by, in curious ways I say curious because to us in America, it has been rather difficult to understand the meaning of many of the maneuvers that followed the outright subjugation of Ethiopia by the power thirsty Mussolini of Italy.

Trouble in Europe

Word that comes rather direct from inner councils in Europe indicates a tremendous fear on the part of Italy and France about German plans. The British likewise are displaying nervousness and the present alliances and combinations of power existing in Europe are none too stable. It is just possible that Germany's Hitler may, by his present activities, force a new cementing of these alliances and understandings among other powers but at this time there is no mistaking the fact that Europe, outside of Germany, is a bundle of nerves.

It seems that the basis for this nervousness is rooted in the clever scheming of Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, who is something of an economic dictator under Hitler. Dr. Schacht is a brilliant negotiator. He understands economics, trade and finance as well as any man in Europe today and when you couple such knowledge with diplomatic keenness, you obviously have a man capable of accomplishing results.

Dr. Schacht is employing the methods he knows best, namely, economic understandings, in making new connections with central European power and the Balkan states.

In the case of Italy, an economic weapon in the hands of Germany might easily prove disastrous because Italy virtually exhausted her gold reserve in the late war and her government cannot go on much longer in furnishing purchasing power for her people. France has been able to open certain markets to the little entente and to the Balkans and has, in addition, provided some financial aid. Thus, when Dr. Schacht pats the neighbors of Germany, on the back and points out where markets can be made for them in Germany, France and Italy quickly develop cases of jitters.

Italy's Case

It seems that Austria and Hungary cannot depend fully on Italian markets because of the low gold reserve in Italy. In the meantime as well, France has been losing millions in gold as her own domestic situation has been emboiled in a political whirlpool. The Austrians and the Hungarians and some of the other central Europeans recognize that unless France gets straightened out, there will not be purchasing power available there for their surplus produce. So, Dr. Schacht is cultivating what appears from this distance to be a fertile field.

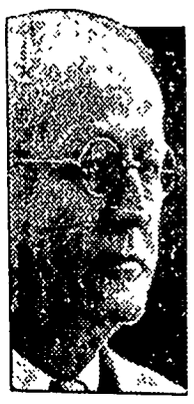
Land Ho!
The Changing Ocean
Safety and Speed
Much for Science

On Board Steamship Normandie.—Four nights from New York and the ship is at Southampton. The Isle of Wight is on your right. Passengers are landing for England. On your left is France. across the water. You land there later. On old crossings passengers watched eagerly for the first land. Now crossing and landing are about as exciting as a trip by rail from Chicago to Lake Forest, or from Wall street to Forty-second street by subway. You are in Europe before you realize that you have started. The poetry of travel has departed with fast ships on the ocean and automobiles instead of camels on the desert.



Arthur Brisbane

No matter how often you cross this Atlantic ocean, or the North American continent, the crossing is always different and interesting. The ocean, like the wide plains, is forever changing.

Two days ago the waves looked like playthings for children. Last night the ocean changed its mind and rolled the waves up high with a shrieking wind. The steward said, "We shall have to fasten the arm chairs tomorrow," but the heavy ship paid no attention to the waves. The ocean changed its mind again and calmed down.

A speedometer telling how fast the ship moves is operated by a mechanism below the keel that records the speed of the rushing water. Burning oil produces steam; steam power is converted into electric power, and that drives the ship. The captain always knows how deep the ocean is beneath him; an electric contrivance sends a sound wave down through the water to the bottom, which sends back an echo.

Knowing the speed at which sound travels through water, it is easy to calculate the depth The machine does it for you. It is a feeble sound—one hundred and sixty thousand vibrations to the second. No human ear could pick it up, but the machine records it. Twenty-five thousand vibrations per second is the limit of your ear, and that is not bad for a primitive contrivance like a human being.

Newton D. Baker, secretary of war in the "big" war, tells graduating students of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology it is their duty to "carry science into politics." Scientists, Mr. Baker thought, must seek for "the solution of world problems when the great international crisis comes, as it surely will come."

A sufficient "great crisis" seems to be here now, with many countries wanting to fight each other, different classes already fighting each other, and in this richest country in the world—ten million human beings living practically on charity.

If that is not a real crisis, few would care to see one.

George Bernard Shaw, not yet eighty, says, "I must give up public speaking, I am too old." That surprises you from a Celt and an Irishman. At eighty many men have been vigorous in thought and body; for instance, Pope Leo, Von Moltke, Gladstone, Michelangelo.

Not one of those, however, suffered from handicaps that have aged George Bernard Shaw prematurely; he is a vegetarian and a teetotaler. Youth and strength reside in a saddle of four-year-old mutton and good, light claret, greatly diluted with water.

In spite of England's pitifully weak and belated backdown on sanctions. due to London's fear of Mussolini's air fleet; a backdown denounced as cowardice by Lloyd George, Britain, for face-saving purposes, will maintain a great fleet in the Mediterranean. Mussolini will welcome such convenient air and submarine targets near home as a sort of British hostages to fortune.

M. Auriol announces that France will not devalue the franc any further. It has already been reduced by 80 per cent, as though our dollar had been knocked down to twenty cents instead of fifty-nine cents. Prime Minister Blum knows that it does not pay to scare capital out of its wits, something that our best Washington minds have still to learn. The French workmen will have their forty-hour week and the strikes are about over. The French, a homogeneous people, realize that if they destroy France they will not have much left.

Returning to the real American interest, the defeat of Joe Louis, young gentlemen and old will observe that it is most important in all undertakings not to be afraid, worn out or cowardly. Fighters that Louis had encountered saw before them "an invincible conqueror of men."

Decisions Save the Constitution

Court Rulings Show How New Deal Plans Its Attack.

How the Roosevelt administration has exerted constant and carefully directed pressure to change the American form of government is shown by a review of the Supreme Court decisions of the last two years. These changes have not been sought by amendments to the Constitution. The administration has attempted to "build up new instruments of public power" without asking the people for the right to do so.

In addition to usurping powers, the record shows, the administration has sought to create powers which are in conflict with the Constitution. It has done this through the passing of numerous laws held to have a "desirable object" and a presumably strong popular appeal. After the Supreme Court ruled these laws invalid the administration systematically assumed the attitude that the Supreme Court and the Constitution had thwarted the will of the people.

The Constitution is the supreme law of the land. In its framework are three fundamentals. The federal and state governments have separate powers. Federal power is distributed among the legislative, executive and judicial departments. None may encroach upon the powers of the others. Guaranties of personal liberties constitute another fundamental. All of these three pillars of the American system of government have been attacked by the administration.

Checked by Court

In defense of the American form of government the Supreme Court, passing upon New Deal laws, has held:

1. That practically unlimited legislative power was delegated to the Executive, thereby destroying the protection afforded by the distribution of power in coordinate departments as provided in the Constitution.

2. That Federal authority was exerted in fields reserved under the Constitution to the States to the extent of "obliterating" the States and breaking down our system of a Federal union of autonomous states. Local self-government has been imperiled.

3. That individual liberties guaranteed in the Bill of Rights were encroached upon.

4. That the taxing power has been expanded into an instrument of coercion and a means of effectuating social and economic control.

A review of all the cases in which the Supreme Court has held acts of Congress or their application to be unconstitutional indicates that at no other period of the history of the United States has there been such a concerted attack upon the American form of government as under the New Deal. It is fair to say that none of the acts held unconstitutional by the Supreme Court prior to the New Deal was the result of any conceived plan to undermine or destroy the Constitution of the United States.

List of Cases

In fourteen cases, laws or their application have been held unconstitutional during the Roosevelt administration. In eight of the cases (two cases affecting the AAA being considered as one) important laws enacted under the New Deal were declared unconstitutional while in two others the application of major laws was held to be unconstitutional. The four other cases were of minor importance, two of them having to do with laws enacted under previous administrations.

The eight major cases in which New Deal laws were held unconstitutional were those of the NRA, the "hot oil" case, the Guffey Bituminous Coal Act, the AAA, the abrogation of the gold clause in government obligations, the Railroad Retirement Act and the Farm Mortgage Act and the Municipal Bankrupt Act. The two chief cases involving an unconstitutional application of New Deal acts affected the Securities Act and the Home Owners' Loan Corporation Act. In two other cases not involving the constitutionality of laws, the Humphrey case and the Parker Dam case, New Deal policies were disapproved by the Supreme Court.

Contrary to the popular impression, only a relatively few acts of Congress have been held to be unconstitutional by five-to-four votes. Out of 79 decisions, the total of cases since the foundation of our government in which federal laws or their application have been held to be unconstitutional by five-to-four votes is only 11. Among the cases decided during the present administration only two—those affecting the Railroad Retirement Act and the Municipal Bankruptcy Act—were by a five-to-four vote. The decision in the NRA case was unanimous, while those in the AAA and Guffey Coal Act cases were by votes of six to three.

nterest Being Shown For Klemme Community Hall

TITION BEING CIRCULATED HAS MANY SIGNATURES

ding Would Take Care Of All Community Entertainment or some time the proposition of ding a community hall here in mme has been talked over, pro con, with the result that fin a paper was circulated to se signatures of those interested uch a project. Those circulating paper have secured many es, and not in one single in ce so far has anyone refused to for the project.

Would Be For The Community

here is no argument against a building It is needed and uld be built before winter. As ore stated, the building would for the use of the community, that takes in all of the sur nding territory as well as the n of Klemme.

very township has an interest the community hall at Goodell rmers in Ell, Twin Lake and erty say they would boost for building in Klemme, as that uld be centrally located for m. Such a building would be n for the use of Farm Bureau etings, Farmers Union meetings, al school plays and entertain nts, supervised dances, moving ture shows roller skating, bas ball games, farm group meet gs. business mens meetings, wnship trustee meetings, town uncil meetings, rural and town hool board meetings, etc.

Such a building would be self pporting as far as up-keep, jani , heat and light is concerned, d the charge for the use of the ilding would be kept at a mini um

A number of men interested ve visited community buildings other towns and in each instance eysay it is the finest thing in the orld for the community.

VE EVERYTHING THAT WILL MAKE STOCK FEED

Conserve all available feed—raw will be straw again this year it was in 1934, and cornstalks ill fill trench silos.

That is the consensus of Iowa ounty agents in reply to a ques onaire asking for suggestions on ow to meet the drouth situation in he state

Every Iowa farmer is urged to efully stack and save all straw. ome farmers harvesting with com ines are following them with hay aders to save the straw, the re orts show

It is difficult for farmers in a ew sections of the state where here is an abundance of roughage ow to realize the feed they would eglect to save might actually save tock in stricken areas.

Indications are that pit or trench ilos will be employed extensively o conserve cornstalks this fall. The rench silo has become increasingly opular during the last 2 years

If the drouth situation becomes moreacute, the agents feel that irst of all arrangements must be made for an exchange of feed sup plies with possibly some feed loans Some western agents suggest that a cattle buying program might be welcomed.

The bulk of the new seedings of red clover, sweet clover and alfal fa has been killed. Practically all of them are failures in the grasshop per-infested areas. This is a partic ularly unfortunate part of the drouth situation because of the ef forts of the agricultural conserva tion program to get more land back into soil building crops.

The carpenters have Mrs. Eelko Buss' new house inclosed and the roof is now shingled.

THRESHING GETS OFF TO AN EARLY START NEAR KLEMME

With a few farmers just finishing the cutting and shocking of late oats, and most oat fields just cut last week the Klemme community started right in Monday with a few farmers threshing their small grain A number of rings started Tuesday, while others expected to get in full swing this week

Local elevator men report that the oats coming in are fine quality and weigh heavy We have no report as to the bushels per acre but the oats yield will run better than average

Residents Approve Use Of Chemical On Streets

CALCIUM CHLORIDE APPLIED ON BLOCK OF STREET TO HOLD DOWN DUST

Is Cheap To Use When Chemical Can Be Purchased By Car Load

Calcium Chloride, a chemical in crystal form, was applied to the block of Main Streeet east of the First National Bank Saturday morning The chemical was purchased by the property owners along this block and was put on by them

Despite the heavy traffic on this particular block, the chemical is working perfectly and holds the dust down The chemical was applied at the rate of about 1½ pounds to the square yard of surface, and another lighter coat will be applied in a few weeks

The experiment is causing a lot of comment and many residents are interested in the project and are contemplating on putting chemical on their streets to hold down the dust.

Town Should Be Interested

If the chemical is purchased in car load lots, the treatment per block would amount to but a few dollars for each property owner Many are of the opinion that the Mayor and Town Council should be interested enough in the appearance of the town to get in touch with property owners and see if it is not possible to purchase a car load The Town could sponsor the purchase of the chemical in order to hold down the cost of dust treating the streets.

The writer estimates that the cost would not be over $15 00 for the average street block in Klemme, and with an average of three residences on each side of a block, the cost would amount to but $2.50 for each property owner It is surely worth that much to live on a dust-free street. But the cost runs considerably higher when the calcium chloride is purchased in ton lots, as is the case on the block just treated.

Klemme Has A Beautiful Park

---BUT WHAT GOOD IS IT?

Klemme has a fine park with lots of beautiful trees, nice walks and a fine band stand. In ordinary seasons the grass is nice and green, and all in all, the park is very pretty to look at'

"Pretty to look at,"—but that seems to be all! That fact was brought forcefully to the attention of the writer the other day when one of our farmer friends asked, "Why don't the town fix it up so it's of some use?" He suggested it was a nice place for picnics, but that the park lacked picnic tables and garbage disposal cans.

It might be well for the men on the Town Council who are in charge of the Park to invest a few dollars of the Town's money in a few picnic tables, a couple of garbage cans, and perhaps have a couple of brick ovens built in a corner of the Park.

If we have a Park ,why not put it to some use?

WHO, ME?

Young Farm Hand Died In Field When Overcome

OBITUARY OF MELVIN HUFF

The extreme hot weather during this harvest season caused one death in our community, when Melvin Huff died while shocking grain

It was on Wednesday July 15th, when Mr Huff and Mr Parkinson were shocking grain for Mr Ernest Helps, who was driving the binder Shortly after dinner, Mr Helps noticed that Mr Huff looked worn and tired and advised him to go to the farm house and rest under the trees, but Huff declared he was not sick Shortly afterward, however, Mr Huff did decide to quit work for the day and started for the house about a quarter mile distant

About three hours later Mr Helps and Mr Parkinson were coming home from the field and discovered the dead body of Mr Huff lying in the lane He had nearly reached home when prostrated by the heat. The lane is a winding road along the edge of a corn field and his companions could not see him from where they were working A Klemme Doctor was called Melvin Huff was 42 years old and had been working as a farm hand in this community for the past fifteen years. He was the son of Ed Huff and was born near Blairstown in Benton County where he spent his childhood days.

A brother, Lyle Huff, of Rockwell, Iowa, called and made arrangements for the funeral Mr Wellemeyer took the remains to Blairstown Friday where funeral services were held in the Presbyterian church and interment made in Pleasant Hill cemetery beside his father

Mr Huff is survived by his mother, seven sisters and two brothers all married and living within driving distance of Blairstown

Mr Chris Back a former resident of Blairstown, attended the funeral services Several of Mr Huff's former employers in Ell township provided a beautiful floral spray for his casket.

North Iowa Grain Co. To Build New Elevator

NORTH IOWA GRAIN CO. TO BUILD NEW ELEVATOR HERE

Material On Ground; Work Will Begin At Once On Structure

The North Iowa Grain Company will build a new elevator in Klemme to be completed before September first. Material for the new building is being unloaded and the work will begin at once

The new elevator will be built just north of the elevator now in use and will be 24x36 feet in size, with a storage capacity of 35,000 bushels. The new building will be constructed of wood with steel sides and roof The latest modern machinery and elevator equipment will be installed.

The old elevator will be torn down as soon as the new building is ready for use Later it is planned to build an annex to one side of the new building

Henry Jost, manager here for the North Iowa Grain Co, has resided in Klemme for the past ten years. He has done much to build up the businessnow enjoyed by the Company here.

The new elevator will be one of the major improvements in Klemme this year.

"When do I get my check?" asked John Martyn as he was admitted to citizenship in Saginaw, Mich.

ALL TIME HEAT RECORDS WERE BROKEN IN IOWA

Cooling Rains End Fifteen Days Of 100 Degree Temperature

Showers and light rams scattered over Iowa and the northwest Friday evening brought an end to the sizzling weather which broke all time records in Iowa when for fifteen consecutive days the thermometers soared to one hundred degrees and above The highest temperature recorded in Iowa was 117. Klemme thermometers registered as high as 111 degrees

Although the rains were light in most sections, they brought cool weather which was a great benefit to the corn and other crops Good soaking rains are needed, but the corn is looking good with the coming of cool weather that lowered the mercury into the eighties and low nineties for daytime and down into the sixties at night

Farm Hand Died

Melvin Huff, 42, farm hand who was working in the oat field at the Ernest Helps farm northeast of Klemme, was overcome by the heat last Wednesday and died when on his way to the farmhouse A farmer near Britt died Friday evening when struck by lightning as he stood in the barn door watching the welcome rain.

Iowa Comes Back

Iowa has never yet had a crop failure and during the hot, scorching days just experienced, many farmers were not alarmed by the threatening drouth One farmer when asked what he thought of the dry weather remarked, "Well, it always HAS rained, and I guess it will this time." He was right.

Danzig Crisis Worries Nations of Europe

WAR-WORRIED Europe shifted its anxiety from the Italo-Ethiopian sanctions problem to the newer and baffling question of what to do about the Free City of Danzig now seeking to free itself from the bonds of the League of Nations.

Adolf Hitler

The league disposed of the sanctions problem by voting to abolish them, thus to all practical intents and purposes removing Ethiopia from the family of sovereign states. Appearing personally before the league assembly, the refugee emperor, Haile Selassie, made a last moving bid for Ethiopia's freedom.

The "king of kings" denounced France and Great Britain without mentioning their names. To the generally expressed desire to reform the league, he said the weakness was not the league covenant itself, but a lack of international morality. The Negus' request for a loan of $50,000,000 to Ethiopia was voted down. Previously Haile had informed Capt. Anthony Eden, British foreign secretary, that he would return to Ethiopia immediately to join his loyal tribesmen and fight for Ethiopian independence.

With Mussolini given satisfaction, the Danzig situation brought into the foreground the figure of Adolf Hitler, chancellor of Nazi Germany It was a Nazi follower of Hitler, Dr. Arthur Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, who demanded independence for the former German city now surrounded by Polish territory and who denounced the league and Sean Lester, league high commissioner for the port.

Observers were of the opinion that Greiser was acting under orders from Chancellor Hitler. In view of Germany's expansionist program and its rearmament, they feel that Danzig will be the next Nazi objective now that the Rhineland is remilitarized. By the elimination of Commissioner Lester or by the curtailment of his authority over the international affairs of the city, it is believed the Nazi would be in a position to crush the opposition party and pave the way for annexation of Danzig by Germany. In the event of a Nazi putsch on Danzig, it was believed that Britain and France would co-operate in opposing it.

July 4th Celebrations Cost 346 Lives in U. S.

A TOLL of 346 lives was exacted in the celebration of the Fourth of July throughout the United States.

Booming cannon crackers played a comparatively innocent part in the slaughter, for only 11 lives were lost in accidents due to firecrackers.

But if the nation heeded warnings about the danger of fireworks, it forgot the menace of motoring accidents, for 208 people in 36 states were killed as the result of accidents on streets and highways. Ninety persons were drowned in 36 states. Miscellaneous tragedies accounted for 37 additional fatalities in 15 states.

Not since 1931 has the celebration of America's patriotic holiday claimed so many victims. In that year the death total from accidents reached 483.

Roosevelt and Landon Return to Their Desks

THE Presidential candidates of both the Democratic and the Republican parties returned to their desks in their respective capitals following absences.

President Roosevelt came back to Washington after a three-day pilgrimage to Virginia. Included on his program was the dedication of the Shenandoah National park, his Fourth of July address from the portico of Thomas Jefferson's home at Monticello and his visit to Williamsburg, capital of the Old Dominion from 1699 to 1779. In his address at Jefferson's home, the President called on the nation to rekindle the "sacred fire" of "true freedom" which had lighted the "golden age" of American history. He declared the present emergencies require the same leadership as that displayed by the founder of the Democratic party.

Gov. Alf. M Landon returned to Topeka, Kan., after a vacation in the Colorado mountains, for the reconvening of the state legislature and for the acceptance speech at the Republican notification ceremonies July 23. National significance was attached to the meeting of the Kansas legislature because of the fact that it would have to deal with old-age pensions, unemployment insurance and general social welfare legislation and that an amendment to the state constitution was in prospect. Discussions of the farm problem and conferences with Governor Landon's political advisers were on the program. The Republican standard bearer was not expected to return to Colorado until after the notification ceremonies.

In the meantime, great activity was apparent in opposing campaign headquarters

President Roosevelt summoned Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley to Washington for a conference on the political campaign. It was expected that the question of Mr. Farley's retirement from the cabinet about which there has been considerable rumor lately, would be decided. The Democrats have established national headquarters at the Biltmore hotel in New York and it is from here Chairman Farley will direct the campaign.

John Hamilton, national chairman of the Republican party, opened national headquarters in Chicago. He addressed 2,800 banqueters at a dinner in his honor and declared that the reaction of voters in recent days has been disheartening to the Roosevelt administration. Since the Cleveland convention, he said, the Democrats had offered the Republicans the "sincere flattery of imitation."

Pope Pius Orders World Censorship of Movies

A WORLD censorship on movies was ordered by Pope Pius, in an encyclical letter addressed directly to the bishops and archbishops of the Roman Catholic church in the United States.

Pope Pius

The pope also ordered bishops throughout the world to obtain from their communicants annually renewable pledges "to abstain from witnessing bad films." The encyclical of his holiness was addressed to the American bishops because they originally took the lead in movie censorship. He invited bishops of the entire world to follow their example.

To carry out the plan of censorship, the pontiff directed that a permanent national movie reviewing office be established in each country. He urged the exchange of information between the various offices for making the censorship effective. He urged bishops to appeal to Catholics connected with motion picture productions to use their influence in accordance with their faith and ideals.

Labor Leaders Begin Drive for Steel's Unionization

WITH labor organizers spreading throughout the nation's steel mills in a drive to enroll 500,000 workers into one big union, the National Labor Relations Board reopened a fight in the courts to force steel companies to accept the National Labor Relations act as a means of keeping peace.

The board announced it had petitioned the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans in a new effort to enforce the act.

Meanwhile the full resources of the $5,000,000,000 steel industry were marshaled against the unionization drive. Observers pointed out that the situation was fraught with grave possibilities, of industrial warfare. Principal steel companies who have banded together in a militant effort to maintain the open shop warned employees not to be "misled" into affiliation with the Amalgamated Iron, Steel and Tin Workers Union, which forms the basis of organized labor's drive.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and head of the committee for industrial organization, in a radio address broadcast from Chicago entitled "Industrial Democracy in Steel," sought the support not only of union labor, but of the public generally in his crusade.

Breckinridge Long Resigns as Ambassador to Italy

BRECKINRIDGE LONG, American ambassador to Italy, submitted his resignation to President Roosevelt because of illness. The diplomat declared that he hopes to recuperate his health during the summer and to take an active part in the Presidential campaign in the autumn.

Mr. Long's place will be taken by Undersecretary of State William Phillips. He will represent the United States government in Rome in an effort to solve Italo-American problems arising from Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia.

Mr Phillips has had a distinguished career in the diplomatic service He has held posts in Europe, the Far East and Canada and has three times been sub-secretary in the State department.

Recovery of Business Holds in First Half

CONTINUING business recovery during the first six months of 1936 fulfilled the hopes of optimistic prognosticators and surpassed the expectations of conservative forecasters.

All the leading trade barometers registered fair business weather at the close of the first half of the year. The production of automobiles reached 2,400,000 units in the first six months of 1936, the best for the period since 1929.

Improvement was further reflected by the steel industry, the operations of which rose from 49.2 per cent of capacity at the start of the year to 71.2 per cent at the end of June. The output of electricity climbed steadily to reach an all time peak in June.

The steady recovery of the railroads was indicated by carloadings which worked up to approach their best levels since 1931. The figures for the first six months of 1936 were substantially better than those for the similar period of 1935

A strong upsurge of home building gave impetus to the construction industry although it still remained at subnormal levels.

Another barometer of improved conditions was the stock market which extended the gains it made in 1935 and reached the highest ground it has held since 1931.

Gen. McCarl Criticises New Deal on Retiring

RETIRING from the post of Comptroller General, J. R. McCarl announced that following the expiration of his term of office he would aid in the government reorganization study undertaken by the senate committee headed by Senator Byrd of Virginia.

Gen. McCarl criticized New Deal emergency agencies as "loosely and extravagantly set up" and as "tax consuming in the extreme." He declared that a systematic reorganization of both regular and emergency agencies would improve government administration and reduce the cost to taxpayers.

Following Mr. McCarl's automatic retirement, R. N. Elliott, associate comptroller, took over his duties.

Justice Bailey Decides Rail Pensions Are Legal

DESPITE his previous decision declaring unconstitutional the tax on railroads to permit pensions, Justice Jennings Bailey of the District of Columbia Supreme Court ruled in an oral opinion that the railroad retirement board could pay pensions to railroad workers.

The justice declared that his previous decision on the validity of the rail pension laws could not be construed to mean that the retirement act itself was unconstitutional. He ruled that the government could proceed to collect from rail workers a sum amounting to 3½ per cent of their salaries and could use the money to pay retirement pensions to the workers when they reach sixty-five years of age or have worked 40 years.

He also ruled that the railroad retirement board could proceed to collect information on which to allot the pensions, provided it did so at its own expense and by recompensing the railroads for any clerical work involved.

Drouth Crisis Brings Government Aid

FEARS that drouth may irretrievably destroy farm crops in North and South Dakota, eastern Montana and Wyoming prompted President Roosevelt to marshal $500,000,000 in relief funds to combat the damage and to develop further plans for fighting drouth.

Secretary Wallace

Secretary of Agriculture Henry W. Wallace, who left Washington for a personal survey of the stricken areas, declared that from all reports conditions had become as serious as they were in 1934, due to lack of sorely needed rains.

The secretary declared that unless rains descend in the sun-scorched regions the government will buy 30,000,000 head of cattle.

In St. Paul, Minn., the governors of the five drouth-stricken northwestern states met with Federal Works Progress Administrator Harry L. Hopkins and administrators from the various states. Mr Hopkins ordered relief jobs made immediately available for from 25,000 to 50,000 farmers who have seen their sole source of livelihood destroyed. The jobs were to be made available on water conservation projects, farm-to-market roads, rural schools and recreational projects.

President Roosevelt, in Washington, appointed a special committee composed of Secretary Wallace, Budget Director Daniel Bell, Aubrey Williams, Assistant Works Progress Administrator and Dr. Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator. They will work in co-operation with a committee of Department of Agriculture officials. The President instructed Budget Director Bell to study government appropriations to determine what funds are available.

Washington —As the full meaning of the platforms of the two major party conventions sinks in, certain very definite conclusions cannot be avoided. In each instance, the two old political organizations have moved into virgin territory, entirely new fields.

Two Platforms

In the case of the Republicans, their Cleveland convention completely reorganized their party leadership and placed the responsibility in the hands of younger men, casting onto the ash heap along with the old guard leaders, many of the old time conservative ideas.

In the case of the Democrats, their Philadelphia convention virtually created a new party. They went further toward the radical side than they have ever gone before. In no spirit of criticism, it must be said that the Philadelphia convention really gave birth to a New Deal party, as such. The one thing they kept was the Democratic label.

The theme song of the Republican platform was molded out of the fabric that is part and parcel of the younger generation as distinguished from the attitude given birth and promoted and protected by the Penroses, the Lodges, the Smoots and others of that texture. This is to say that the Republican convention, for the first time in many years, has moved its campaign pronouncements out onto something approximating a moral plan, or at least the evidence is they have attempted to do so.

The Democrats, having had ten days between the Republican convention and their own in which to study the Republican document and improve upon it, went considerably beyond their opponents in the language they used They have made an appeal to the voters of the nation that surely will attract many thousands of voters to the support of Mr. Roosevelt.

On the other hand, the Philadelphia convention proceeded to cast aside many traditions, many principles, which old line Democrats, who love the Jeffersonian theory, regard as their political bible, and they may antagonize that segment of the old party by so doing.

To state the proposition in another way, many observers and political analysts hold that while the Democratic platform contains fewer contradictions than does the Republican pronouncement and that, on the whole, it is a much better written platform, they have leaned so far to the radical side that they are leaving conservative Democrats and old guard Republicans only one place to go—to the Republican candidate. This develops because, in the first instance, the old guard Republicans obviously cannot embrace a Democratic platform which they regard as too liberal and they have no choice but the Republicans. The conservative Democrats will have the choice to make. They can go to the New Deal party or they can remain as old line Democrats and swallow their pride of party affiliation long enough to support the Republican, Governor Landon.

One may look back over the doings at Philadelphia and recognize that the meeting was thoroughly controlled from Washington. That was natural because the party in power obviously has all of the important federal offices filled with its own men. The convention included among its delegates about 64 per cent of federal office holder-delegates.

Under Orders

That explains better than any way I know how the 104-year-old two-thirds rule was so easily abrogated. That rule has been a sore spot in conventions for years. It has many times been the direct cause of bitter convention battles and has bred scores of bitter personal animosities. It was none the less interesting, however, to see the Philadelphia delegates toss out principles of the Democratic party with such utter abandon.

I am convinced that the Democrats have not seen the end of the two-thirds rule yet. There is every indication that it will arise again when the next quadrennial meeting is held. There are plenty of Democrats who believe that the requirement of a vote of two-thirds of all delegates shall be recorded for the man selected as the party's Presidential nominee is a protective measure. But when the convention voted out the two-thirds rule, it took the Democratic party out of the hands of the South.

It seems to me that the Southerners cannot be blamed for desiring to maintain that two-thirds rule. This is their position: through all of the recent elections, the Democratic nominee has begun his campaign with the assurance that 11, 12 or 13 states in the South would give him their electoral vote. He could concentrate, therefore, on the North and the West. The old line southerners have held that since they always supplied from 100 to 140 electoral votes upon which the Democratic nominee could build, they ought to have something to say about his nomination, about the type of man selected. The two-thirds rule gave them a veto power and they have used it many times.

Now, unless the old line Democrats again gain control of the party, the South will no longer be able to sit as the umpire in deciding the type of character of the man who will bear their party label in campaigns.

The question may arise in many minds as to how the rule came to be discarded so easily. Earlier in this report to you, I mentioned that 64 per cent of the delegates to Philadelphia were federal office holders or party leaders selected by the Roosevelt patronage dispensers. The presence of those office holders and party leaders who have been bound to the Roosevelt administration in one way or another constitutes the answer. There were enough of them in the southern delegations to constitute a balance of power on close votes in state delegation caucuses. Hence we witnessed a good many southern states voting to abrogate the two-thirds rule over protests of some of their own numbers.

There is another circumstance about the Philadelphia convention that I believe warrants mention. It may have gone unnoticed generally but just 160 years after Thomas Jefferson drafted the Declaration of Independence, the Philadelphia convention of the Democratic party copied from the immortal Declaration the famous phrase: "We hold these truths to be self-evident."

Quote Jefferson

It was a bold move on the part of the New Dealers to lift that Jeffersonian expression and to place it among the many new theories and new ideals which they advance under the banner of what was the Jeffersonian party. Some observers point out that this action may invite comparison between the political ideals of Thomas Jefferson and Franklin D. Roosevelt because surely there is much more in the Declaration of Independence than the simple expression that certain truths are self-evident.

* * *

In these days when the world, as well as the American nation, is sorely troubled and disturbed, those Americans who are convinced that isolation may ruin our country, can find little satisfaction either in the Democratic or Republican platforms. This may not seem important until one looks back over the last two decades. Examination of what has happened in that time is sufficient to demonstrate the significance of this isolationist trend by both major political parties.

Talk About Peace

The Republican plank on foreign affairs has little to say and what it says is chiefly negative. The plank drafted by the Roosevelt administration and adopted by the Philadelphia convention is as nebulous as the milky way. Each platform talks about peace but it is decidedly doubtful that either platform has offered a genuine way to obtain or maintain peace.

It was only natural that the Republicans should restate their opposition to the League of Nations. It was likewise only natural that the Democratic plank on foreign affairs should be full of glittering generalities because it is yet to be remembered that the late Woodrow Wilson has countless followers in the New Deal party who hold the conviction that the League of Nations, with American support, would solve most world problems. It is obvious, therefore, that the Democrats could not commit the party either to League adherence or non-adherence.

Except for the party split over the old Wilsonian policies whose ideals stood as a ghost in the background in the Philadelphia convention, one might have expected more definite declarations from the Philadelphia conclave. For example, the Roosevelt administration has sponsored reciprocal trade agreements. It has broadened American foreign policy in many other ways but some leader in the group that drafted the 1936 platform was smart enough to realize that a declaration on internationalism that was too strong would have brought about a vicious outburst at Philadelphia. In consequence, almost nothing of a tangible character was forthcoming.

Therefore, in summing up, I think it must be concluded that both platforms have been drawn to appeal to Americans as isolationists. Likewise, it occurs to me that the interpretation of their promises and plans and foreign policies by the two contending candidates will be the more interesting as the campaigns proceed.

BLUE MONDAY BANISHED

Research which has freed the human race of many dangers from sickness and disease now is turning to the problem of home modernizing The purpose is to discover ways and means to relieve the homemaker of many tasks which often make housekeeping tiresome and burdensome

Undoubtedly the greatest single progress ever made in the home was banishing that old bugaboo, blue Monday washday Now the rapid spread of household ironers, banishing the old hot and tiresome task of finishing the family wash shows that man's inventive genius is being appreciated more and more by women

Women need no longer dress or undress for the ironing job She need not work in thee kitchen or cellar The living room or any other pleasant place in the house is a convenient and logical place in which to finish up the week's clothing

From the brook the art of laundering progressed until it reached the wash-tub stage and this for a time, as many older readers will recall, was believed to be a milestone on the road of progress, as indeed it was, but the women began to get hunch-backed from bending over the wash-tubs It was then that benefactors of mankind began perfecting home laundering equipment as we know it now in its present perfected form

If making washday easy did nothing but banish the old Monday noon lunch which was the warmed over remains of Sunday's feast, all the research that has been used for the benefit of womankind and mankind would not have been in vain

PROPHETS OF DOOM

Luckily for humanity, it still maintains a saving sense of humor were this not so, the wailings of the pessimists would drive us all crazy For surely there is no lack of prophets of doom to harry us with their doleful warnings that the world is going to pot

Each long-faced brother solemnly assures us that unless his particular panacea for saving the race shall be speedily adopted there is no hope Modernism, flapperism, automobiles, politics, hootch, dancing, movies, bridge and cigarettes, singly or in combination, constitute the outstanding menace, according to the viewpoint of the particular alarmist who happens to have the floor

Thus after listening to these apostles of doom, with a more or less pronounced feeling of boredom unregenerate humanity turns to the funny pages and smiles at the varying fortunes of Jiggs and the Nebbs

This does not mean that the average person is indifferent to the evil in the world It means that sensible people recognize the inherent weakness and folly of humanity and refuse to become unduly excited about it They realize the futility of trying to carry the burdens of the world on their shoulders, though they seek to be helpful in practical ways They courageously face the things that are while sanely striving for the things that ought to be

THE SPEED OF LIGHT

Marvelous as was the discovery that sound impulses could be transmitted by telephone and radio, their mere transmission would be of little value if they traveled only with the speed of ordinary sound

But fortunately, electrical and radio impulses travel with the speed of light, which for all practical purposes is instantaneous for terrestrial distances, or about 186,000 miles a second

Incidentally, it may be mentioned that so far the longest combined telephone and radio conversation ever carried on by a regular toll customer was between San Diego Canifornia, and Stockholm Sweden a distance of 8,630 miles By special arrangement longer distances have been covered

Many improvements in telephone and radio communication will be made in the future, but there will be no increase in speed. Always the sounds are transmitted with the speed of light, the speediest thing in the universe.

G. O. P. Is United Behind Alf Landon

John Hamilton New National Chairman; Will Carry Fight to Enemy.

TOPEKA, KAN.—"We want to get an early start and carry the fight right into the enemy camp," said Gov. Alf M. Landon, shortly after his nomination as the Republican candidate for the presidency. And in a meeting which followed at the Kansas capital, party leaders gave him a free hand.

Acting In complete harmony, the same kind as that which characterized the G. O. P. convention, the new national committee chose John D. M. Hamilton of Topeka, Landon's young campaign manager, as the new chairman. He will administer the campaign from the Chicago headquarters, with Harrison E. Spangler, of Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Arthur M. Curtis of Missouri, and Charlton McVeagh of New York as his associates.

Henry P. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania, the retiring national chairman, was named general counsel of the committee and C. V. Goodspeed of Chicago treasurer. Vice chairmen are Ralph E. Williams of Oregon, J. Henry Roraback of Connecticut, Mrs. Lucy Hillman of Colorado and Mrs. Marjorie W. Scranton of Pennsylvania

The following national committeemen and women were selected for the national executive committee: Robert P. Burrough of New Hampshire, Joseph W. Martin, Massachusetts; Mrs Paul FitzSimons, Rhode Island; Charles D. Hilles, New York; Walter S. Hallanan, West Virginia; J. Will Taylor, Tennessee; George A. Ball, Indiana; Harrison E. Spangler, Iowa; John Wyeth, Missouri; Mrs. Horace H. Sayre, Oklahoma; Daniel E. Pomeroy, New York; Ezra R. Whitla, Idaho; Earl Warren, California; R. B. Creager, Texas, and Mrs. Bertha Baur of Chicago.

FEAR IN PHILLY

Chicago.—"The Republican nomination in Cleveland and the Democratic nomination that will be made in Philadelphia will be different in one way," said John Hamilton, chairman of the Republican National committee, here. "Ours was unanimous through enthusiasm; the Democratic nomination will be unanimous through fear. There were no patronage considerations at Cleveland."

National Debt Reaches 34⅓ Billions; Record

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Still spending more than two dollars for every one taken in through taxes and other revenue, the New Deal a fortnight before the close of the 1936 fiscal year had skyrocketed the United States national debt to a point within a stone's throw of the 35 billion dollars which Daniel W. Bell, acting director of the budget, estimated it would be on June 30.

The actual figure, according to the treasury statement of June 15, was $34,331,355,867, another all time record high, and $13,395,297,073 more than it was when Roosevelt took office.

The deficit for the fiscal year up to June 15 was $4,684,940,227, an increase of more than one-third over the $3,303,473,199 deficit for the same period of the preceding fiscal year.

This will be the most expensive of 'three long years" of Roosevelt spending; total New Deal expenditures for the fiscal year up to June 15 were 8 billion 492 million dollars, as compared with 6 billion 864 million for a like period of the year before. Last year on June 15 the national debt stood at $28,700,415,830.

Swelled with 250,000 full-time federal payrollers added by the New Deal, the departments of government are spending more today than they did a year ago But the biggest spenders of all are the alphabetical agencies which administer "public works and relief".

Thoughts for Posterity

Washington, D. C.—Paying at the rate of a million dollars a day, it would take more than 94 years for the United States to pay off its national debt, even if no interes were charged

Cowboy Rides to Convention

Here is A. L. ('Yelp an') Yowell old-time 4 Sixes Ranch cowboy, as he left Dallas to ride to the Democratic National Convention June 23. ## The Weather

If I could run the weather, for seasons two or three
A medal made of leather you'd surely give to me
The climate now presented strikes us as being bad
Most men are discontented and some of us are mad

When sunshine's badly needed, the rain falls every day
The fields by hard work seeded, are drowned and washed away
And when we need some water to save our oats and rye
The sun gets hot and hotter, and things began to fry

I'd get my friends together, and ask for their advice,
If I could run the weather, just once, or maybe twice
I'd give them what they wanted, a cyclone or some heat
By precedent undaunted, I'd give it and repeat

The man who runs the weather, sits in a tower alone
And cares no fig nor feather how weary mortals moan
He has no helpful system, no useful plan in force
Though we have often blessed him, he goes his bughouse course

He keeps the punk sun sizzling when we are needing rain
And sends the water drizzling, when floods are on the plain
He combs his handown heather, and runs things hit or miss
If I could run the weather, I'd fill your lives with bliss

Heavier Taxes Faced by Poor

Government to Increase Collections From the Householder.

Students of recent developments in the nation's finances predict another tax bill after election. Although tax collections in the fiscal year 1936 were higher than at any time since 1930, expenditures by the Roosevelt administration continue to increase More and more revenue will be necessary to meet continuing extravagances and revenue can only come by taxation of all classes of the people.

The tax measure, forced through the last Congress by Mr. Roosevelt, is now beginning to take on its true outlines. It was not primarily a revenue act but an election year effort to impose more regulation, or "reform" on business. The $700,000,000 revenue proposed by the 1936 tax bill could have been gained by simple government economies, as suggested by Democratic Senators. But economy has not begun to operate, except in political platforms, speeches and promises

Blow at Employment

Mr. Roosevelt's plan to force the breaking up of business surpluses, on the pretense that these safety reserves were escaping taxation has put a brake on recovery without materially contributing to the Government revenue The 1936 tax act makes it more difficult for business and industry, representing the great employer group, to put aside sufficient reserves to hire more people, expand their operations and retain a surplus as a protection against troublous periods.

With this abrupt interruption of a short "breathing spell" for business, confidence again has been weakened In addition the next Congress must return again to the necessity of passing a real tax measure, a measure that will raise large revenues. It is shown by Washington analysts that these collections will have to come from the rank and file of Americans and not from the so-called rich. Many thousands of small investors already have been hard hit by the 1936 tax act because they are owners of small blocks of shares in the corporations that have just been "disciplined" by the Administration

Taxes Come Into View

As taxes are heaped upon manufacturers, shop-keepers, power companies, motor cars and fuel producers, transportation and capital those taxes will be passed on to the consumer in the form of higher prices for food and other necessities The average man and woman for some years have been paying the taxes thus made necessary by Government demands, but have not realized that they were being taxed. Even the poor have paid their share. It is predicted the hiding of taxes will become more difficult as Government spending and taxing continue to grow. As one bank expert put it the hidden tax soon will cease to be "painless"

In the fiscal year ended June 30, 1936, the Federal Treasury's receipts from all sources were $4,115,956,615. Of that sum income taxes, both individual and corporate, accounted for only about one-third, namely, $1,426,575,433, despite income tax rates higher than any previously imposed in peacetime. The larger portion of the Federal revenue, namely, $2,009,626,790, was not derived from income levies. That figure includes taxes on estates, gifts, capital stock and excess profits, but these taken together account for only about five hundred million. The remaining three-quarters of this major item in Federal income is collected in taxes upon scores of items of daily use, such as tobacco, numerous manufactured articles, alcoholic beverages, etc. Among the commodities included are such articles as chewing gum, watches, gasoline, tires, inner tubes, radio sets and refrigerators Also included are taxes on coal, theater admissions and telephone and telegraph messages.

It is estimated that nearly three-fourths of all of the families of two or more persons in the United States have annual incomes of less than $2,500 and therefore pay no individual income taxes. But through their purchases of the necessities of daily life and a few modest "luxuries" they share a tremendous tax burden equal to if not greater than the amount raised by all income levies, both individual and corporate. Many of these consumers of modest means doubtless believe that they do not pay taxes because they do not have to file income tax returns. But they do pay taxes in the form of higher prices of food, clothing and other necessaries

Crop Shortage Shows Folly of Potato Act

Drought has caused a shortage of potatoes and prices are higher than at any previous time in ten years. The situation has again called attention to the notorious potato act of 1935 Under that act the secretary of agriculture was authorized to say how many potatoes should be grown for sale. It was proposed to reduce production by telling every potato-raiser how many bushels he could produce for market.

Wallace Bares New Deal Plans

His Complete Co-operatives Seen as Death Blow to American Ideal.

By WILLIAM J. LEE

CHICAGO, ILL.—Establishment of co-operatives for producers and consumers, wiping out the American system of free competition and business on a profit basis and threatening the ruin of independent farmers and tradesmen and retail storekeepers, is now seen as one of the next objectives of the New Deal.

New Dealers at the Philadelphia convention presented a plank in favor of co-operatives that had the support of President Roosevelt, but this was rejected by some of the older and conservative members of the resolutions committee "as being too radical," so only a modest reference was made to the scheme in the platform.

However, publication of a book entitled "Whose Constitution?", by Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace revealed the scope of the New Deal co-operative ideas.

Study Co-operatives in Europe.

In his book Mr. Wallace declares that "it is inevitable that more and more emphasis is going to be laid on the idea of co-operation as distinguished from free competition" and sets forth that the only way a democracy can survive "is to develop the genuine co-operative ideal to the limit."

"Producers' co-operatives are not enough," he asserts. "The co-operative way of life must pervade the community, and this means there must be consumers' co-operatives as well as producers' co-operatives"

The day after the Wallace book appeared, President Roosevelt announced he had sent a New Deal commission to Europe to study the operation of co-operatives.

Commenting upon the Democratic co-operative plank, the Wallace book and the President's co-operative commission, and the fact that there are marked similarities between Mr Roosevelt's acceptance speech and the Wallace volume, the Kansas Times states:

"(It is probable) . . . that the inner ring of New Dealers already have agreed among themselves as to the next trick they will pull from the bag, either at an opportune time in the campaign or after the election, should it go their way.

"The co-operative commonwealth idea . . . has recalled the declaration of Prof. Rexford G. Tugwell some time back that, under the new order he envisaged for America, business as it now is known logically would tend to disappear."

Platform Reticence Explained.

How the Wallace idea of co-operatives is viewed in Democratic circles may be seen in the following statements by Frank R. Kent, Democrat, in one of his recent columns:

"Apparently he (Mr. Wallace) believes that under the general-welfare clause a liberal-minded Supreme court could permit transformation of the country into a gigantic co-operative commonwealth, under which the objectives of the NRA, AAA and other invalidated New Deal measures could constitutionally be achieved. There seems no other way to interpret his language.

"It is quite the most far-reaching idea yet advanced and it is easy to understand why the New Deal politicians did not want it injected into the campaign."

From this it seems clear the New Deal now proposes to set up a system of regimentation that would ruin every independent farmer and every independent retail merchant. There are millions of independent farmers and more than 475,000 retailers in the United States.

Such a regimentation might deny a farmer's son an opportunity to hew a living for himself on his own farm and prevent a man establishing himself in a business of his own making. All might become cogs in a huge federal machine.

Roosevelt Primary Foe Supports G. O. P. Ticket

Topeka, Kas.—Listing seven reasons for his decision, Col. Henry Breckinridge, New York Democrat who ran as a candidate for President in the Maryland primary, asserted here he would support Landon and Knox in the Presidential campaign. Before announcing his position, Colonel Breckinridge paid a surprise visit to Gov. Alf M. Landon.

Colonel Breckinridge prefaced his reasons for enlisting under the Landon-Knox banner by declaring that the machinery of the Democratic party had "been seized by a group of men who had repudiated every living principle of the party and subverted the Constitution of the United States."

"Governor Landon's word is good," said Colonel Breckinridge. "He will perform his promises, he is direct and he has no hidden purposes."

Mrs. Caris Kropp visited at the E. J Blumer home Wednesday afternoon.

NEW DROUTH MAY RIVAL THAT OF '34

Rainfall Far Short of Former Dry Periods; Dakotas Hardest Hit; Federal Government Acts to Prevent Disaster.

By WILLIAM C. UTLEY

ONCE again the plains of the West are thirsting in a major drouth that may surpass in destruction, desolation and despair even the record drouth of the spring of 1934 Rainfall has been far less in some states this spring than in 1934, although this year there has been an absence of the sweltering heat which accompanied the earlier drouth.

Worst conditions have been in the western part of the Dakotas, eastern Montana and Wyoming; in a somewhat smaller area where the corners of Kansas, Colorado, New Mexico and Oklahoma meet; another area of about the same size in southeastern Missouri, and over a vast region of the Southeast, including generous slices of Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, the Carolinas, Kentucky, Virginia and Pennsylvania. Over the remainder of the states between the Alleghenies and the Rockies, except for some areas about the Great Lakes and in New England, poor pasture conditions exist.

The result has been to throw thousands of farm families on the relief rolls; to cause more thousands to move out of the drouth regions into other states; to drive prices of food higher and higher, with dollar wheat once more returned to Chicago and other markets, and to spur the federal government to swift operation of remedial agencies.

Drouth Talk Displaces Politics

There is little talk of anything else but the drouth in the stricken plains; the speculation as to the chances of rain overshadow even the argumentative possibilities of politics in one of the most colorful and interesting political campaigns of the nation's history The barometer and the thermometers are under even closer scrutiny than primary returns and stray votes.

Prayers for rain by the farmers of the Northwest have been largely in vain, with clear, unclouded skies still looking down over the parched grazing lands. Crops are suffering from the effects of the dust blown upon them, while live stock are hungry from lack of feed, which has been likewise damaged by the silt.

There has been some little rain in the Southwest, indeed heavy rainstorms the last week in June in Texas were so severe that 26 persons were drowned in the flood which resulted. Dozens of homes were swept away along the banks of Big Sandy creek near San Antonio. The Southwest benefited little from slight precipitation during May.

The Dakotas probably have been the hardest hit. The governors of both states, as well as Senator Nye of North Dakota, regarded their situation as serious enough to warrant their making a personal visit upon the President of the United States, to make a plea for money to feed live stock and bring relief to distressed farming people. The government has undertaken to render what assistance it can; cattle will be moved out of the drouth lands into better pasture, but there will be no wholesale slaughter as there was last year. During the month of June some of the Dakota grazing land in the worst areas received only about an inch of rainfall, where 3 2 inches is normal.

Cost Is $250,000,000.

From April 1 to June 24 during the "big dry" of 1936, North Dakota had only 2 06 inches of rainfall; during even the record drouth of 1934 these three months saw 3.83 inches of rain. South Dakota fared some better, getting 4.31 inches, as compared to 4.54 in 1934. In Montana 3.17 inches of rain fell, as compared with 4.15 in 1934. Texas' rainfall during the spring months was only 7 per cent of normal.

By July 1 this year's drouth, it was estimated, had cost a damage of 250 million dollars. In the Northwest alone, 100,000 farm families were forced to seek subsistence aid from the government.

In Washington a drouth emergency committee was set up under J. W. Tapp, to make arrangements for the purchase and processing of a million head of cattle, which would perish if the drouth c · ued, although it was predicted that there would be some rain within a few days.

A survey of conditions in the drouth area, compiled by Harry L. Hopkins and the WPA revealed that hundreds of family heads would have to be transferred to the relief rolls immediately. Their cattle had been sold and in most cases they had already piled up what Mr. Hopkins called "mountains of debt."

Reporting about results of the dry spring of 1934 and other drouth periods, Hopkins said during the six months before last December 15, more than 32,000 persons had been forced to leave their homes in the "dust bowl" and migrate to California.

Third Drouth in Six Years

"Most of the Great Plains area faces its third major drouth in six years," said Hopkins. Some of the regions, particularly those in the central and western Dakotas, have had low crop yields since 1930. In practically all of the areas, the severe drouth of 1934 intensified the distressing rural economic conditions which have been accumulating over a period of years.

"The extent of wind erosion and crop damages has varied widely in different sections of the stricken area; a few sections, favored with normal rainfall over a long period, have escaped soil and crop ravages altogether. This is true of sections of the Red River valley in North Dakota, part of southeastern So Dakota and to some extent southeastern Nebraska "

In other regions, such as the north Texas plains, he said, wind erosion has damaged as much as 95 per cent of the land. Some of the land is damaged so badly that it is doubtful whether it will ever be able to support crops in the future. Hopkins declared that much of the crop land in sandy loam areas should be converted into permanent grass land.

Drastic reductions in the herds of cattle in some of the states have resulted from reduction of pasture land by three-fourths. In the Dakotas, Minnesota, Montana and Wyoming, officials estimated that 100,000 families would have to be added to the relief rolls It was planned to carry the work relief program until December 1 and as far beyond that date as the weather would permit, at an average wage of $44 a month. Compensation for use of farmers' teams would bring the average to about $60 a month.

Three Government Programs.

Officials of the federal government say to the farmers that the Great Plains can be prevented from becoming a desert if proper precautions are taken. Science has not yet devised a way to make it rain, but the government now has under way a program of three divisions to provide for the storage of what moisture exists and to prevent soil erosion.

First of the three divisions is the soil conservation program. This does not refer to the entire substitute AAA program, but only to that part of it which actually is soil conservation proper. This means the work and the educational program undertaken by the soil erosion service of the Department of Agriculture.

Attempts are being made to restore vegetation on thousands of acres of plowed fields, on the theory that such vegetation will combat erosion and conserve moisture. Nine contour furrowing demonstration stations have been set up in the West. This furrowing consists of the development of small terraces with closed ends. These are supposed to conserve the rain.

In many regions the CCC is assisting the soil conservation service in the undertaking. It is believed that if the farmers can be taught to put vegetation on part of their land and to furrow correctly, the campaign will be successful in eliminating most drouth disasters.

To make possible the storage of water for use in times of drouth, the reclamation service of the Department of the Interior has under way a series of dam and irrigation projects in the western states. Some lesser projects of this nature have been on the WPA schedule.

These projects are of ambitious scope and wide range. At the top of the list are such enormous and expensive ones as the giant Fort Peck and Grand Coulee dams, and at the bottom are numerous small streams which have been dammed at comparatively lower costs, although their costs have been attacked from time to time in many cases as wasteful "boondoggling." Officials believe that eventually water from the reservoirs behind the large dams will make possible the use of much land that is now unproductive, and that the smaller dams will help in relieving the situation generally.

What 1934 Drouth Did to Once Rich Grazing Lands.

Resettlement Program.

In a third division of the program, the resettlement administration, under Professor Tugwell, has under way a $10,000,000 schedule of purchase of submarginal lands to convert them into pasture in combating drouths. Under this plan, it is proposed to buy 1,282,522 acres of the submarginal land at $2 an acre; it has already made some little progress. The program is divided into two parts, one of which involves six projects in the Plains states, embracing 415,000 acres. The other part includes the purchase of 867,522 acres of Indian grazing land on the Rio Grande watershed of New Mexico.

The conception of the resettlement program includes the moving of 650 families to better land at a cost of $3,300,000—that's $5,076 a family. It also comprises $2,645,000 for the purchase of land, and $300,000 for antierosion work and the development of plains land.

There was a fourth division of the federal government's battle against the drouth menace, the $75,000,000 shelter-belt program, but this program has been dropped, due largely to opposition which labeled it impractical Approximately $3 000,000 had already been spent

The idea was to plant a belt of trees 100 miles wide and more than 1,000 miles long, stretching from the Canadian border across the Great Plains to Texas. Its proponents contended that such a shelter belt would break the erosion-causing winds and conserve some of the moisture The weather bureau says that it would have no effect on rainfall itself. However, congress refused to appropriate the funds needed for the project, and Comptroller General McCarl, recently retired, ruled that the President could not use $15,000,000 of drouth relief funds for the purpose. McCarl did, under protest, permit the use of a smaller sum.

Some shelter-belt strips, along a 1,300 mile line, have been planted. Such a strip consists of a narrow row of trees up to a half mile long

Winds Cause Uniform Climate

Winds, when not opposed by mountain barriers, tend to cause uniformity of climate, over extensive areas. They largely determine rainfall, therefore controlling distribution of life.

A King's Farewell
Good Soldier Obeys
An If or Two
40,000,000 Degrees

Paris —To "last words of dying men" will be added those of the late King George of England — "I am sorry to keep you waiting like this." Typical of a good, modest king, always obedient to duty.

Arthur Brisbane

At the request of his ministers, including Sir John Simon, who waited upon him at the last moment, the king struggled pathetically to sign his name to a state paper, succeeded, then, turning to his advisers, spoke those last words, followed by a smile and nod with which he was accustomed to end an audience.

This was published in the Star of Johannesburg, South Africa, in a Reuter dispatch. Mr. Gunia sends the clipping from Gibsonia, Pa. Much obliged.

The Italian soldier Badoglio, in the striking uniform of an Italian marshal, returned to Rome and embraced Mussolini, who wore the uniform of a corporal of fascist militia. Napoleon also liked to be called the "little corporal."

Marshal Badoglio is an Italian soldier who obeys orders. When Mussolini's forces were marching on Rome, Badoglio, according to the story, said to the king: "What shall I do—wipe them out?" The king ordered: "No; no violence." Now, Mussolini rules, and on his orders Badoglio wipes out Haile Selassie and the government of Ethiopia.

Anything could happen in Europe, and one of the things considered quite possible, extremely disturbing to respectable old England and others, is an agreement between Mussolini and Hitler to make "a deal on Austria" profitable for both; not for Austria.

There is always, however, the memory of 1914, when Austria, Italy and the Kaiser had the triple alliance that did not "stand up." Such alliances usually go along racial lines, if they are to last. France and Italy are natural allies, both Latin; England and the United States would probably be found not far apart if a really big World war should ever come, with one or two other IFS.

Science proudly demonstrates for the Westinghouse company a new lamp that "rivals the beams of the sun" The demonstrator explained that the temperature at the sun's surface is about 11,732 degrees Fahrenheit, while the new lamp reaches 25,232 degrees Fahrenheit That, however, as scientists know, is a long way from the sun's best temperature.

According to Sir James Jeans, there prevails in the depths of the sun temperature of "forty million degrees centigrade," which is considerably higher than any man-made temperature

If you came within 1,000 miles of a 5 cent piece with a temperature of 40,000,000 degrees centigrade, you would be burned to a cinder; hard to believe, but true.

England protested against raising the elevation of guns on American warships because that would make our guns shoot too far. In case of war we might hit a British ship lined up against us.

Are animals capable of any thought?

A dog on Prince Edward island, whining and howling with its muzzle against a pile of clothing on the edge of a pool, attracted men who took from the water the bodies of two brothers, fifteen and seventeen years old. Could the dog have "thought out" a connection between the clothing and the disappearance of its young owners?

At Ur, ancient city of the Chaldeans, they show a gigantic brick temple, recently uncovered, where it has lain in the ground covered through the ages. It was constructed originally, like the tower of Babel, to enable the builders to get up into heaven and reach the gods. First they invented those pagan gods, and then they actually believed in them.

The United States navy has ordered 191 "bomber" airplanes; cheerful small news

It is to be hoped that the government is trying to build bomber planes able to fly any ocean.

If war came, our bombing operations could be carried on in countries across the Atlantic or the Pacific We should not want to do any bombing in America. After the first experiment, no country would send any ships within easy bombing or submarine range of these shores.

"Down With Demon Rum!"

BACK in the early days of the temperance movement in this country, a poem, called "The Song of the Decanter," which was often reprinted in the newspapers, was this typographical curiosity:

There was an old decanter, and its mouth was gaping wide, the ruby wine had ebbed away and left its crystal side; and the wind
went humming, humming—up and down the sides it flew and through the reed-like hollow neck
the wildest notes it blew. I placed it in the window where this blast was blowing free and fancied that its pale mouth sang the queerest strains to me: "They tell me puny conquerors!—that Plague has slain his ten, and War his hundred thousands of the very best of men: "But I—twas thus the bottle spoke—"But I have conquered more than all your famous conquerors, so feared and named of yore. Then to me, you youths and maidens, come drink from out my cup the beverage that dulls the brain and burns the spirits up, and puts to shame the conquerors that slay their scores below; for this has deluged millions with the lava tide of woe. Though in the path of battle darkest waves of blood may roll, yet while I killed the body I have damned the very soul. The cholera, the sword, such ruin never wrought as I,
in mirth or malice, on the innocent have brought.
And still I breathe upon them, and they shrink before my breath;
and year by year the thousands tread this dismal road to death!"

Twice Sworn In

TWO of our Presidents had the distinction of being inaugurated twice in the same term. They were Rutherford Birchard Hayes and Calvin Coolidge.

Hayes' inauguration day, March 4, 1877, came on a Sunday so the inauguration ceremonies were scheduled for the following Monday. But because tradition had established March 4 as the date for a President to take the oath of office, Hayes took it on Sunday as a precaution against there arising any question of the legality of his taking it on March 5. He took it again the following day in the formal inauguration ceremonies.

The story of how the oath of office was administered to Calvin Coolidge in the lamp-lit Vermont farm house of his father, Col. John Coolidge, upon receipt of the news of the death of President Harding, is a familiar one to all Americans. But it is not so well known that a few days later a second oath was administered to him in a room in the Willard hotel in Washington by A A. Hoehling, a justice of the District of Columbia Supreme court.

Harry M. Daugherty, then attorney general, had questioned the validity of the first oath administered to Coolidge. As a justice of the peace, Colonel Coolidge was a state officer and therefore presumably had authority to swear in state officials but not federal officers. So Daugherty secretly arranged the ceremony in the Willard and on a hotel Bible Calvin Coolidge took the oath of office a second time.

Name? Nome!

THE city of Nome in Alaska has the distinction of being the nearest American town, of any importance, to the Old world. It is less than 150 miles from the mainland of Asia.

Another distinction lies in the fact that it was named by mistake. In the early maps of Alaska one cape which juts out into the Bering sea was left nameless. An official, to whom a draft of one of these maps was submitted, penciled beside it the query "Name?"

A copyist transcribed that scrawled question as "Nome" and the name stuck. Eleven miles to the west a little settlement, called Anvil City, sprang up. In the autumn of 1898 gold was discovered in one of the creeks inland near this town. Then came the stampede of 1899, Anvil City adopted the name of the cape and became Nome. In two years Nome was not only the largest city in Alaska territory—20,000 inhabitants by the summer of 1900—but also the symbol of one of the greatest gold rushes in history.

MORGAN HORSE OLDEST

The Morgan horse is America's oldest breed, according to a writer in Hoard's Dairyman. It was the general utility horse of New England in the Nineteenth century. Now a saddle horse for bridle path, hunt, and range it is noted for its stamina. Height, 13 hands preferred. In the fall of 1795 Justin Morgan went from Vermont to his former home in Springfield, Mass., to collect some money due him. Instead, he returned with a gelding and a two-year-old colt. The latter was later named Justin Morgan after his owner and became the fountainhead of the breed. Although Morgan, the man, died three years later, Justin Morgan the horse, lived to the ripe old age of twenty-nine years and finally died from an injury.

"Death Ship"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

T ready for action. Here comes Distinguished Adventurer Hart N. Deane of New York city, and he's bringing with him a packed with thrills that—well—I didn't know whether I was or going when I read it, and I'm betting you won't either.

took place on a ship called the S. S. Barstow, a gasoline tanker, ed at Fort McHenry, just outside of Baltimore, Md. You could ough all the harbors of the world looking for that boat today, ver find a trace of her.

She just ain't any more. By the time Hobey Deane got ough adventuring with her, there wasn't enough left of her ick your teeth with. That's the story.

was February, 1918, along toward the close of the World war and his shipmate Al were in the merchant marine in those days, e Barstow was the ship they were working on at the moment.

Hobey's Adventure Starts With a Boom!

bey's adventure started with a big BOOM! Yes, I mean that Six or seven sailors were sitting in the mess room about three one cold February day, when suddenly there came the sound of explosion. Along with it came a shock that seemed to lift Hobey ut of his clothing. He jumped to his feet and ran to the deck, e rest of the gang right on his heels.

"We arrived on deck," says Hobey, "in time to see a big gas tilator from the forward tank land like a rocket in a heap barreled oil that was piled up on the dock, ashore. At the ne time, a sheet of flame several hundred feet high shot out our forward tank. Thousands of gallons of naphtha were aze."

wn on the dock, some of the crew were casting off the ropes. A me alongside and began to haul the Barstow out into the bay. a third of the way out, the tug's captain decided it was too risky to stick around any longer, and beat a retreat without taking uble to ask the men aboard the Barstow if they wouldn't like a ck to shore.

Two Heroes Sacrifice Their Lives Courageously.

here were about twenty of us aboard," says Hobey, "and from earances we were in a swell way to be blown to chop suey We bout to get in when it occurred to us what might happen if the rifted in close to land and went up.

"The boatswain and his storekeeper, two heroes if I ever w any, went forward and released the anchor. But on the way ck there was another explosion and they were blown to bits. e magazine where we kept the ammunition for our anti-sub arine gun had started to go up, and it had taken the boat ain and the storekeeper along with it."

ter that, the ship got too hot for comfort. Shells meant for sub es were whizzing from that burning magazine in all directions. rew made a run for the lifeboat—and just as they reached it, a hit it and blew it to splinters. "Believe it or not," says Hobey, neither Al nor I were touched by the flying debris. By this time hole fore and midships were a mass of flame

Al and Hobey Leave the Floating Bomb.

t was raining molten metal, chunks of iron and steel and pieces of r. Al and I and a deck boy made our way back to the stern and, a conference, decided to jump. We hadn't much time to lose. Even he ship seemed to be swelling beneath our feet like a giant bomb."

Hobey couldn't swim a stroke, but Al told him to jump, and 'd bring him to shore. The deck boy hesitated until Al as red him he'd be right behind. Then he dove into the icy wa r. "Al and I waited for him to come to the surface," says obey, "but the seconds became minutes, and he didn't show .

We never saw him again, and I have never felt so desolate in all my But life is sweet, and I realized that no matter how slim my chances they were better in the water than on the Barstow The nearest reserver was below deck, and by this time, burnt to a crisp. I had pend on Al" ell, sir, Hobey took the plunge. The shock of the cold water numbed and he thought he'd never come up. "I didn't much care, either," ys. "But I hit the surface at last, and Al had a hold of me before w it. I grabbed his shoulder with one hand and paddled with the and we set out for a tug that was lying a thousand yards away.

"It seemed we were moving at a snail's pace. We got some stance away from the ship, but I could see the February water asn't doing Al any good. He was fagged out. My heart and ngs felt as if they were in a steel vise. I was done. All I anted to do was let go and rest."

obey was right. Al WAS fagged. He stopped swimming and began ead water—shouted to the tug for help. The tug's skipper knew it angerous to go any nearer to the burning vessel, but he took a e. "They came at a good clip," says Hobey, "but it seemed for before a couple of husky seamen got hold of us and lifted us up he deck."

Hobey says he'd like to end his story by saying both he and got pneumonia. But they didn't even have a cold the next y. The Barstow, though, didn't do so well. She burned to the ater's edge.

Hypnotism Long in Use for Medical Treatments

ychologists in universities, while tigating the mechanism of the n mind, often employ hypno to bring to the surface its hid workings, while physicians have mately used it many times in ng cures of certain kinds of —such as drug addiction or al ism.

pnotism is not a mysterious flashed over hundreds of miles e power of some dark hypnotic writes Prof. A. H. Estabrook in cientific American. A hypno person is much like one who s in his sleep. If you can find a person and start a conversa without waking him, you are in touch with the sub-conscious mind of one who is already hypnotized. The unconscious mind is in control of the body. In the hypnotic trance, however, the unconscious is also in touch with an operator. This accounts for the curious results obtained, for the unconscious is very open to suggestion and has a remarkable power over the entire body.

Apples, Pears, on Spurs

Most apples and pears are borne on spurs. Spurs are merely shoots which have slowed down in growth They may grow a very small fraction of an inch year after year, producing only a few small leaves and forming leaf buds each year.

In Southern California

Oil Derricks Form Background for Tomato Patch.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

TALK with priests at the old missions and they will tell you that pioneer padres trained Indians to do the first irrigation work in Southern California Some of their old ditches still exist.

You can tell by where these missions stand what good judges of land the priests were. They never built a church on poor soil.

Local farming owes these padres a great debt. They not only brought the first cattle and horses, but they experimented with seeds to see what would grow best in California.

They planted the first oranges and grapes. Lemons, figs, and olives they brought, too, and wheat, destined to become a tremendous crop.

Almost feudal in aspect were these mission farms. Indians were trained as farmers, cowboys, carpenters, saddle makers, and weavers. They made things not only for the use of priests and themselves, but for Spanish soldiers as well.

Cattle became the mainstay of life, with beef the chief food; hides made leather for saddles, harness, and shoes, and even served as money. Early sea traders from New England called them "California bank notes."

Sheep, too, were raised; and Indians made blankets and cloth for suits from the wool. They raised some hogs also, mostly for lard to make soap.

Missions served as stock farms from which private owners could borrow enough breeding animals to build up their own herds Horses of a tough, speedy type, with a strain of Arabian from those brought to Mexico by conquistadores, thrived there, multiplying so fast that in time wild herds became a nuisance Men used to drive them into the sea to drown them.

Cattle often ran wild over the open range. In self-defense travelers sometimes had to shoot savage bulls. At slaughtering time, vaqueros rode down the thundering herds, slew what they wanted, and left carcasses to be skinned by butchers who followed. Melted tallow was packed in hides and transported to sailing vessels along the coast. This trade dwindled after gold was found.

"The inflowing of population made an end to the great droves of cattle," wrote Dana in 1859, on his second trip to California.

Old Ranches Cut Up.

Today this once huge industry, which kept the shoe and leather trades of New England supplied, is a dim tradition. In museums you see old oxcarts and horse gear, massive hand-made furniture and pioneer weapons.

Santa Barbara stages a fiesta each season, in which modern beaux and belles dress in pioneer Spanish costumes, ride horses with Spanish saddles, sing Spanish ballads, and dance fandangos to early Spanish music.

But the modern spectacle is more splendid than the original hard, frugal life of toil ever was.

Practically all old ranches are cut up now. One or two, like the Santa Margarita and the Tejon, remain; but overseers make their rounds in motor cars. In fields where grunting oxen once pulled wooden plows, you hear now the staccato voice of gas tractors

Among long-tailed, squawking macaws and tinkling bells in the Mission Inn garden at Riverside stands an old, old orange tree. It is one of two navel seedlings sent here from Brazil, by way of Washington, in 1873. Both lived and are ancestors now of countless trees whose fruit reaches not only the most obscure nooks of the United States, but goes to forty-odd ports overseas, even into Alaska by dog-sled delivery.

What a colossal feat of distribution!

Think of 100,000 carloads a year, cars riding an average of 2,600 miles each. Fantastically, you visualize this endless orange flight as a universe of tiny yellow planets flying forever out of California and into space! Orange picking never stops. Navels move from December to May and Valencias the rest of the year. With oranges go lemons and grapefruit, picked, packed and shipped from some part of California every day in the year. Europe alone takes upward of a million boxes, and Canadians drink orange juice even as we do.

To move and sell such incredible cargoes, more than 13,000 growers form the Fruit Exchange Their salesmen are posted in 59 central markets, here and abroad. Their brand stamped on fruit is known around the world. They even own their own timber lands and sawmills, where millions of crates are made for packing fruit. By-products, like orange and lemon oils, citric acid and citrus pectin, are made and sold by this organization.

Ships that carry its fruit abroad are vast floating refrigerators, for they must pass through the Panama canal and other tropic waters

Frost is fought with oil-burning orchard heaters, while millions are spent on sprays and fumigation.

Value of Co-operation.

Individual growers, competing, could not have obtained such methodical, world-wide distribution of oranges now graded, inspected, and sold by the Exchange. It is conspicuous among all man's co-operative efforts Common interests unite its members, both in business and social affairs.

One visit to an annual orange festival, with all its music, drama, pageantry, and carnival spirit, shows what a role this fruit plays in California life.

More than any other one force, it was the lure of life in a sunny California orange grove which started easterners migrating here in the 1880's—and it still brings them.

From its trees, since the Exchange started its records in 1894, have been picked and sold nearly $2,000,000,000 worth of citrus fruit—or more than the value of all gold mined since its discovery in 1848!

The Bible story of the miraculous gourd vine that grew in one day to make shade for Jonah is hardly more astonishing than the rise of the western vegetable trade. It is an exciting page in the annals of our national farm life. New food habits, the call for more green things, is one cause. Advent of the iced car, overcoming California's former disadvantage of remoteness from eastern markets, is another.

Due to geographic barriers, as late as 1900 this trade was a mere trickle Now, with refrigeration, standard packing, and advertising, more than 100,000 carloads of garden truck, largely grown in California, ride east every year.

Busy Imperial Valley.

Imperial valley, that below-the-sea "Hothouse of America" once called the Salton Sink, grows more cantaloupes, honeydews, and casabas than any area its size in the world. Its large-scale operations are indeed "industrialized farming"

Terrific heat, dust, and the frantic picking, packing, loading, and icing of more than 6,000,000 crates of melons in a few weeks turn this valley, from May to June, into an inferno of nervous haste.

Only Mexicans and Japanese seem able to work in the sun-scorched fields; some say that only they can tell just when a melon should be picked, or when a mule will surely drop from being overheated if driven another rod. Yet 60,000 residents endure this climate!

Frost-free regions along the San Diego coast send their share of tomatoes, celery, and other green foods. Los Angeles county was the pioneer garden spot; there first grew that lettuce now called "iceberg head," an Italian strain introduced through Vilmorin, famous seedsman of Paris.

Electricity for Everything.

You marvel at miles of power lines carried on steel towers. Hardly a country home is without electricity. Farmers throw a switch and machines cook food, heat water, milk cows, sterilize milk, and separate the cream. Electric power hatches eggs and warms the coops. Long, dry summers call for much pumping, and electric irrigation pumps run almost continuously from April to September.

Walnuts, formerly dried in the sun, are dehydrated now by electricity. To make seeds germinate faster, cables laid in the soil are heated by this power.

With electricity oranges are colored and precooled for shipment.

Motors hum in myriad industries. In busy oil fields, shops, and harbor sheds, bright lights turn night into day. With electricity men drill for oil, pump it when natural flow subsides, and refine it. The same source heats enormous furnaces and annealing ovens.

In California electricity spurred imagination long before the rest of the world appreciated its versatility. The reason is that California, when most of the present electric systems started in the 1890's, had no native fuel except wood. Coal, transported from far places, was costly; but in the mountains was abundant water power. The market for electric light was small in pioneer times and few industries had then started; but the farmer was there, and entrepreneurs taught him to use power for irrigation as early as 1893. Now power lines cover the state's map like a web.

Gracious Speech

Would it not be wise if we cultivate more the art of kindly and gracious speech? A kindly word laden with sympathy we all instinctively feel may, and oftener than we now know does, eternally influence a life. It acts like a motor that gives to the life an upward trend, as the unkind word too often gives a downward impulse.

Queen Victoria Shocked Subjects by Ry. Journey

When Queen Victoria, in June, 1842, made her first journey by train from Slough to Paddington, and declared that she had enjoyed it, wide circles in Britain sustained a serious shock. Men and women shook their heads, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly.

According to contemporary records, Queen Victoria "accomplished the journey free from dust and crowd and heat, and was quite charmed with it."

The queen's favorite coachman insisted upon accompanying the engine-driver in order to see that nothing was done to endanger her safety. When he descended from the footplate at Paddington station, reliable observers say he resembled a disheveled negro minstrel more than a servant in Royal livery.

A question was afterwards asked in the house of commons by an M. P. who "thought that her majesty's person should not be subjected to the hazards of railway travel." An answer was given stating that two carriages had been interposed between the engine and the carriage occupied by the queen, to obviate risk of collision.

In those days many notable people strongly opposed the new mode of travel. The duke of Cumberland, for instance, in the house of lords, voted against a bill for a new railway because "it would be very disturbing to the Eton boys." He added that "passengers would be shaken to death in these devil's carriages, and all for what?"

Celsius Thermometer Is Named for Its Inventor

The Celsius thermometer—after its inventor, Anders Celsius, Swedish scientist—is more commonly known as the centigrade. The Reaumur scale is one used to some extent in Europe.

Fahrenheit temperature readings may be converted into centigrade by subtracting 32 degrees and multiplying by five-ninths. Thus, states a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, three degrees below zero, Fahrenheit, is 19 4-9 below zero on the centigrade scale. Centigrade becomes Fahrenheit by multiplying by nine-fifths and adding 32.

Reaumur readings may be converted into Fahrenheit by multiplying by nine-fourths and adding 32, or into centigrade by multiplying by five-fourths. To convert Fahrenheit into Reaumur subtract 32 and multiply by four-ninths.

The Celsius zero is at the freezing point and its 100 degrees at the boiling point of water (under 760mm. barometric pressure). The Reaumur scale has its zero at the freezing point, and the boiling point at 80 degrees. Fahrenheit placed his zero at the lowest temperature he could produce, achieving it by mixing snow and salt. On his scale the freezing point is at 32 and the boiling point at 212.

Haggis Is Not Scotch

Haggis is generally regarded as a delicacy only among the Scots. Most Englishmen have but a vague idea what the fearsome thing is, yet in the Middle Ages it figured largely in the dietary of the workers, says Tit-Bits Magazine. It originated, however, not in England, nor in Provencal France, where a very similar concoction known as "pieds et paquets" is considered a delicacy, but from classic Greece. These refined, artistic, fastidious ancients not only ate it and enjoyed it, but immortalized it in verse. Brought to England by Roman legionnaires, it narrowly escaped becoming the national dish of England. The concoction is made of oatmeal, pepper, salt, the liver, lights, and heart of a sheep; the whole being sewn into the stomach bag of a sheep and boiled.

"Last Aid" Clubs

There are clubs for poor persons in Sofia, whose principal purpose is to provide their members with a good "send off" into the next world and to assure that their funerals shall be "successes." The clubs have different names, the most popular being "Last Aid" and "Last Duty." When a member dies, all the other living members subscribe an agreed amount each to cover the funeral expenses and the meal which is offered to the mourners after the ceremony. They also see to the provision of a proper hearse and flowers. All the members are obliged to walk in the funeral procession In addition, if it is found necessary, the remaining members provide relief for the widow and children of the deceased.

Three Parishes in One Church

The chapel at Tunbridge Wells holds the distinction of being the only church to stand in two counties and three parishes, observes a writer in Pearson's Weekly. It is partly in Kent and partly in Sussex. When the clergyman leaves the vestry he comes out of the parish of Frant, Sussex. If he is going to officiate at the altar, he walks into the parish of Tunbridge, Kent, while in the pulpit he stands in the parish of Speldhurst.

Insects Migrate

Insects apparently possess an extra sense that is not shared by mankind. This is a direction sense similar to but much more remarkable than, the migratory instinct of birds. Insects migrate with the same infallible directness as birds, but there is this difference, whereas with birds migration means a double journey, the migrants depart and again return, and may contain old birds that know the route; with insects the journey is undertaken only once and by a new generation.

PLENTIFUL SUPPLY IS MAKING BEEF CHEAPER

Good beefsteak at prices that people can afford to pay this is the happy situation which has returned

The amount of beef produced in June was the largest in any June in history so that there is once more an abundance of good beef Prices are from 7 to 32 percent below those of a year ago depending upon the cut

Many Cuts Available

As a result of modern cutting methods there is a wider selection of cuts available to the housewife than ever before This wider selection makes possible a greater variety of meat dishes in the daily menu.

Since 1900 people in the United States have eaten an average of 139 pounds of meat per person annually. Approximately half of this amount has been beef, including veal.

Beef production is one of the major sources of farm income in Iowa About 79 pounds of every 100 pounds of beef produced in Iowa must find a market outside the state so that themore that is consumed in Iowa, the less that will have to be marketed elsewhere

Meat Deaelrs Cooperate

August has been designated as National Beef Month During that month a special effort will be made to increase consumption of beef All retail meat dealers in the nation are cooperating inhelping the 5½ million farms of the country that produce beef to find a market for their product

NO AMERICAN SAHARA

Scientists are not yet willing to agree that the disastrous and persistent drought that has again parched the fields of the West is a step toward the creation of an American Sahara Also, they smile at the idea that man's feeble hand has been the cause of the drought. Stripping the sod from the Great Plains has, of course, increased the evaporation of ground moisture and loosened the soil so it could be sucked up by the winds, but it has not stopped the rain To J B Kincer, of the United States Weather Bureau, this period of sub-normal rainfall is merely one end of a weather cycle which will eventually turn and again bring plentiful rains to the drought ridden areas Tree-ring experts add weight to this belief by citing evidence in ancient logs of periodic droughts even more severe than the present one centuries before white men knew the Americas existed.

As for the creation of an American Sahara, scientists ask for the condition that could cause such a drastic change in the climate of North America The vast rivers of air that sweep up from the tropics and down from the Arctic and have so much to do with the making of North America's weather are not influenced by small factors Dr J W Humphreys, of the Weather Bureau, says it was the retreat of glacial ice sheets from Europe that changed northern Africa from a fertile region to a waste of drifting sand. But America still has the Arctic ice cap to cool its polar winds Also, the transformation of Africa was not accomplished in a few years. It took thousands.

Fire Started In Center Of 85 Acre Field Here

ADVISE RIGID CULLING OF HENS AND PULLETS

Rigid culling of hens and pullets at this season is good practice for it will give those remaining a better chance to produce and remain healthy during the laying season

One of the most common mistakes which poultry keepers make is to crowd too many birds into the house The old rule of 4 square feet of floor space for each bird should be followed

Cull Weak Birds

During the growing season, watch the pullet flock for the slow developing, weaker birds and cull these out before they go into the laying house It is better to keep the pullet and hen flocks separate if possible This can be done sometimes by dividing the house with a wire partition

Some poultrymen in recent years have followed the practice of selling off all old hens and depending entirely on pullets for egg production, but proven yearling hens that lay well are much better birds to keep than untried pullets Although yearling hens will lay about one-fourth fewer eggs than they did in their pullet year, their death loss is likely to be lower and if only the best of them are kept, egg production should be satisfactory if they are given good care

Band Light Birds

Leghorn pullets should weigh at least 3 pounds when they are housed, which is the time they begin to lay, and heavier breed pullets at least 5 pounds. If the birds are lighter, they should be banded or marked in some way so that they can be culled later.

If eggs are to be sold from the flock, those from yearling or older hens are likely to produce stronger, healthier chicks than those from pullets.

When the pullets began to lay, they should be brought in off the range and housed. The feeding then must be be carefully done because the birds are then entirely dependent on the poultryman for their subsistence

The houses in which pullets go should be thoroughly cleaned and sprayed with a good strong disinfectant before the birds are confined.

Card Of Thanks

We wish to extend our sincerest thanks and appreciation to friends and neighbors who helped extinguish the fire in our oats field last Thursday morning —Mr and Mrs Albert Kehl. 1tp

SALT HAS MANY USES

Salt is not only a seasoning; in small amounts in brings out other flavors, as melon or grapefruit. A bit ofsalt improves cocoa or chocolate sauce, candy, ice cream, preserves, pies and pudding, intensifying the natural flavor and offsetting cloying sweetness or flatness Unless a recipe gives a definite amount to be used, it is better to "salt to taste," proceeding cautiously and tasting as one goes.

And for fishy odor on hands dishes, try salt. After handling fish, wash the hands with hot water and salt but without soap until after rinsing off the salt. A strong hot solution of salt in water without soap removes odors from dishes.

BLAZE IN FIELD DESTROYS OVER 30 ACRES OF GRAIN AT ALBERT KEHL FARM

Burning Straw Stack Endangered Buildings At Anson Avery Farm

Thursday just before noon a fire started in the oats field at the Albert Kehl farm north of Klemme, and about 35 acres of grain in the shock was burned before the fire was brought under control What caused the fire is a mystery as the blaze started in the middle of a large field Help arrived from surrounding farms and town A strip was plowed ahead of the fire and it was checked in that manner. The field in which the fire started was approximately an 85 acre field.

Blaze At Avery Farm Wednesday

While firemen were working to extinguish a fire at the Anson Avery farm, 2 miles west of Goodell, the Goodell fire truck caught fire and firemen put it out with chemicals

It was believed a match which went through the threshing machine was the origin of the fire A new straw stack caught fire, blazing up suddenly and setting blaze to a last year's straw stack nearby The stacks were only a few feet from a large, modern barn

The barn was scorched and the shingles caught fire several times but the barn was saved by the Goodell fire department.

The fire in the stacks smouldered throughout the night and neighbors helped keep an all night vigil in case wind should change and set the barn afire

60 Acres Oats Burned Near Clarion

A 60-acre oats field beling to J C Peterson, 4½ miles west of Clarion was burned about 4:00 o'clock Wednesday afternoon. By plowing furrows, about 20 acres was saved It is thought that sparks from a railroad engine caused the fire.

Grass Fire At Belmond

At Franklin Grove near Belmond Wednesday, a large grass fire was extinguished by firemen A picnic had been held in the grove Three other big fires burned over considerable acreage the past week The other fires were thought to have started from sparks from trains.

Spinach Value Exaggerated

Many mothers, and fathers too, coax and beg and even order their children to eat their spinach—because somebody has said it is good for them The purpose of this item is not to say that spinach is not good ' and grown-ups It is a delicious green and many children learn to like and enjoy it if not forced to eat it when they don't feel so inclined While spinach does contain vitamin A, the food value of the vegetable has been greatly exaggerated There are a number of other greens that possess or contain a larger content of vitamin A The New Jersey Dental Society's committee on science claims that escarole, kale and even parsley contains more vitamin A than spinach.

A CHEAP SILVER CREAM

Many housewives clean their silverware by boiling it in an aluminum pan or with an aluminum plate. Good silverware should not be cleaned in this manner. Rather, it should be cleaned with a fine powder or paste. An inexpensive silver cream can be made at home by dissolving a tablespoon of washing powder in a cup of boiling water and adding a tablespoon of olive or castor oil. Stir in a pound of whiting, mix well and keep in a glass jar with tight cover.

The United States is the largest consumer of sugar in the world.

FAMOUS HEADLINE HUNTER

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"The Hat on the Floor"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter

BEATRICE JOHNSON of Brooklyn, N. Y., has a doggone good criticism to make of Old Man Webster, the bird who wrote the dictionary. She says that when he defined the word "fear" he didn't half do the job.

And to illustrate her point, she tells a story of a big night at the Johnson home, when the whole darned family got the scare of their lives.

Beatrice is fifteen now, but she was only ten at the time of her adventure. Then she lived on Rockaway avenue out in the Brownsville section of Brooklyn with her mother, three little brothers, and an older sister.

Her father, a veteran of a colored regiment in the World war, had died some years before. The Johnsons lived on the top floor of a tenement, one of a long row of buildings all alike, and all joined together.

Mama Johnson Believes in Playing Hunches.

The door of their apartment led from the hall straight into the kitchen, and that door was a flimsy thing with a large pane of glass in the upper panel. It wasn't much of a protection, and the Johnsons, who had no man in the house to take care of them—well—it sort of got on their nerves a little.

One spring Saturday night in 1930, it got on Mama Johnson's nerves just enough so that she stayed home with her family instead of going to a party to which she had been invited. Ma Johnson still can't explain why she stayed home that night. She just had a hunch that something was going to happen. And sure enough—something did.

It was a hot night, and the whole family had gone to bed. Beatrice's kid brothers were snoring away in the next room, and her older sister, just recovering from an operation, was asleep, too. Beatrice was just about to drop off, when suddenly she was awakened by a loud crash—the sound of shattering glass!

Beatrice Investigates the Cause of the Crash.

Beatrice sat up in bed, her heart beating rapidly. That crash had come from the kitchen. It could mean only one thing. Some one was breaking into the house.

Her throat was dry, and her whole body was shaking. Mechanically, she picked up a bathrobe and jumped out of bed. To get to her mother's room she had to pass through the kitchen. Would the intruder be there? She put her hand on the door-knob and turned it slowly—quietly. The knob turned all right, but when she started to swing the door open, it creaked loudly.

Beatrice went weak all over from fright. "For a second, I stood there, unable to move," she says. "I tried to pray that the burglar would spare our lives, even though we had no money to give him. To this day I don't know what prompted my hand, but I reached up and turned on the light. Then my mother came rushing into the kitchen."

One glance told them that some one had been there. The glass pane in the kitchen door had been smashed to bits. The burglar's hat—a gray fedora, lay in the center of the kitchen floor. But the burglar himself was nowhere in sight. Was he hiding somewhere about the house? Neither Beatrice nor her mother dared to look. They were afraid they'd find him.

Hatless Intruder Grins in Through Broken Door

After that there was more confusion than the Johnson family had seen in years. Beatrice ran to the window. Her mother woke up her brothers and sister. Her little brothers were so scared that instead of getting dressed, they undressed—took off the underwear they were sleeping in and stood naked in the middle of the kitchen floor. Beatrice has laughed about that scene a hundred times since, but she didn't then. "I was scared stiff," she says. "I couldn't have smiled for a hundred dollars."

And then, suddenly, the thing happened. Beatrice's smallest brother raised a pointing finger and screamed: "There he is!" Beatrice looked up, and sure enough, there he was—a short, middle-aged Italian, his head and torso framed in the opening that had once been the glass panel of the kitchen door. He was hatless; his face pale; his eyes bloodshot, and he was grinning!

It was that weird, terrifying grin that scared Beatrice more than anything else. "My knees came near giving way under me," she says. "I ran to the window and screamed bloody murder." The garage man across the street heard her and called to a cop who was just up the street.

"Dago Red" Was Cause of All the Trouble!

Meanwhile, the little Italian had vanished. The Johnson family pulled themselves together, while the policeman and the garage man searched the house for the intruder. They found him all right, but when they arrested him for a burglar, he was the most indignant guy you ever saw. He wasn't a burglar, he said. No such thing. And what was more, he wanted his hat back.

Then the whole story came out. The little Italian had been out for the evening, and had taken a little too much red wine. He got into the wrong house—that wasn't hard to do because the whole doggone row of them looked alike—and when he had leaned against the Johnson's door to steady himself, the glass had broken and crashed to the floor.

His hat had fallen from his head, landing on the kitchen floor, and that's what he had come back for when Beatrice saw him there, grinning. He was grinning, he said, because the Johnsons looked so funny, particularly those three kid brothers standing in the middle of the floor without a stitch of clothes on.

Karakul Sheep Sacred

Karakul sheep have been regarded as sacred by Brahmans, Buddhists, and Mohammedans, notes a writer in the Detroit Free Press. They are the first animals mentioned in the Bible and historians consider them the first animals to have been domesticated in prehistoric times. "To the Bokharan, each part of the sheep has a symbolic meaning. The skull is regarded as the seat of knowledge, flexibility of life, etc., and on sacred pilgrimages the roadside is hung with these parts which the pilgrims touch.

Festival of Midsummer

In pagan times Germany celebrated the festival of Midsummer, or "Sonnenwendfest," as the occasion when day triumphed over night, light over dark, the forces of good over evil, and today many superstitions are still observed. A young couple expecting to be married soon must either jump through the wheel of fire or over a bonfire, so that their union will be a happy one. In some sections, a few handfuls of grain are thrown into the flames, a souvenir of the old custom of offering a sacrifice to the sun.

POULTRY FACTS

REQUIREMENTS FOR SUMMER EGG YIELD

Feed, Water, No Lice, Mites; Cull Non-Layers.

By J. C. Taylor, Extension Poultryman, New Jersey College of Agriculture. WNU Service.

Four requirements for the maintenance of profitable summer egg production are clean and cool laying houses, the regular feeding of clean food and cool water, the elimination of lice and mites, and the culling of the non-layer.

Birds which fail to lay well when the first three requirements are met should be removed from the laying flock. Poor layers are revealed by definite characteristics, the more important of which are as follows:

Comb—pale, small, scaly; eye—sunken, dull; beak—yellow; vent—small, yellow, dry, shanks—yellow, round; feathers—new feathers, molting; skin—thick, hard, fatty.

Important characteristics of the layer are as follows:

Comb—red, large, soft; eye—prominent, bright; beak—white; vent—large, white, moist; shanks—white, flat, feathers—worn, soiled; skin—soft, thin, loose.

All birds that show characteristics of a non-layer should be removed from the flock every week. It is a good plan to test your ability at picking out the non-layers by putting the birds you have selected as non-layers in a pen by themselves for a few days. If no eggs are found in the pen it shows you have done a good job.

Sell Roosters, Is Advice of Iowa Poultry Expert

In order to protect the interior quality of eggs, roosters should be removed from the breeding pen as soon as the hatching season is over, recommends Dr. N. F. Waters, of the poultry husbandry staff at Iowa State college. If the male remains with the hens, the eggs will be fertile, and if a fertile egg is held at a temperature ranging above 68 degrees F., the germ will develop.

A fertile egg will deteriorate much more rapidly than an infertile egg. An infertile egg seldom rots, but a fertile egg will decompose rather rapidly if exposed to high temperatures. The loss to the poultry industry resulting from marketing fertile eggs has been estimated at more than $1,000,000 per year, Waters declares.

It is a false belief that a hen will not produce as many eggs if the male is removed from the pen.

If males are valuable, and it is desired to hold them over until the next breeding season, they should be placed in separate pens.

Alfalfa for Hens

There is no one best way to feed alfalfa hay to hens. Grinding fine-stemmed, leafy, green alfalfa in an attrition or hammer mill, and adding it to the mash, is one way to feed this best green feed substitute. Experience indicates that it should not make more than 5 per cent of the mash by weight. More alfalfa than this reduces the palatability and amount of the mash eaten. A second very satisfactory method is to feed bright, green, fine, leafy alfalfa in a hay rack. One can use a slatted rack, similar to that used for cattle or sheep, but with the slats and openings from one and one-half to two inches wide. This is hung on the wall of the house, or a circular container made out of two-inch mesh poultry netting can be used.

In the Poultry Yard

Alfalfa makes an excellent range for chicks.

Lime, in some form, is necessary to the formation of egg shell.

People of Britain eat an average of 151 eggs per person a year.

Growing chicks should be moved to clean ground every two weeks.

* * *

At least 60 per cent of the laying flock should be pullets, as they produce better than the average flock of older birds.

If sodium fluoride solution is used in dipping chickens for lice and mites, the solution should not be left where stock may drink it.

To decrease the spread of diseases from old hens to growing chicks, never allow them to mix or even to use separate parts of the same building.

Egg production has increased, with output by farm flocks about 4 per cent greater than in the spring of 1935.

* * *

The Pekin duck is ready for market within eight weeks of hatching, the average weight swinging around the five-pound mark.

Concrete floors are recommended for poultry houses as well as stable floors owing to the ease with which they can be kept clean and sanitary.

Lord Howe Island

Mount Lidgbird on Lord Howe Island.

Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

"DECORATED with palms"—how often the phrase occurs in descriptions of social events! Wherever florists ply their trade and have a hand in beautifying public occasions, palms play an important part. Without them hotel lobbies, steamship salons, dance halls, and churches would lack their refreshing greenness.

Often referred to as just "florists' palms," they are taken for granted, like many of our common blessings. In reality, they belong to a small group usually called Kentia palms, found only in remote islands of the Coral sea, and their present widespread use throughout the civilized world is one of the romantic tales of horticulture. A little more than half a century ago they became an important article of commerce, and few people even today realize from what a tiny bit of the earth's surface that particular commerce originates.

In 1788 Lieut. Henry Lidgbird Ball, en route from Sydney, New South Wales, to Norfolk island, discovered a remarkable pyramid of volcanic rock rising straight out of the Tasman sea to a height of 1,816 feet. He descried land to the northwest, which further investigation revealed as an island of unusual conformation and striking beauty.

In honor of Richard Howe, the British admiral who played an important part in the war with the American colonies, Ball called his contribution to the British Empire Lord Howe island. His own name was given later to the massive rock which first attracted his attention, and Balls Pyramid is his enduring monument.

Lord Howe island lies 360 miles east of Australia and 480 northeast of Sydney. It has the form of a boomerang, with its length extending nearly north and south, the concave side facing Australia and the precipitous eastern coast arched against the surging Pacific. In an air line the northernmost part of the island is only seven miles from its southern tip and the greatest breadth is but a mile and a half.

Formation of the Island.

The northern half is hilly, but the highest point is only 700 feet above the sea. The southern half is mountainous, rugged, and wild. Two peaks occupy most of this area, the southernmost, Mount Gower, rising directly from the sea to 2,840 feet, while its fellow, Mount Lidgbird, is but 300 feet lower. The mountains are thickly wooded, so far as their precipitous sides permit, and are separated from each other by a lush valley into which man rarely penetrates. Between the northern hills and Mount Lidgbird is rolling country with fertile soil and a plentiful water supply.

Extending from the northwestern tip of the island straight south to below Mount Lidgbird is a broad coral reef, notable as the southernmost coral reef in the world. Between this reef and the island itself lies the lagoon which it protects, its eastern side bounded by a bathing beach of clean white sand some two miles long. The reefs prevent vessels from approaching close; they must anchor about a mile offshore, and passengers and freight are then landed, by means of motor-towed barges, at the jetty near the northern end of the lagoon.

When Ball first landed on the island there were no signs of the genus Homo; he and his men were probably the first human beings who ever set eyes on its beauties. The richness of the vegetation, the abundance of birds, and the numerous rivulets of clear, cold water indicated plainly, however, that here was a little paradise awaiting settlers. Nevertheless, for many years the island lay neglected.

About 1833 or 1834 a small company from New Zealand, including several Maoris, were brought to Lord Howe, but in two years they were so discontented that they were taken back to their old homes in New Zealand, and Nature once more was left in untroubled possession.

But not for long! American whaling vessels, scouring the southern seas, found that Lord Howe island was an excellent place to replenish their water supply. There were no government officials to deal with, no distractions to tempt desertion, and no natives with whom the sailors could get into trouble. By 1840 reports of these numerous visiting whalers reached Sydney, and two families established themselves on Lord Howe to grow fruit and vegetables for the crews. So well did the settlers prosper that others followed, and by 1850 a small community was well rooted on the island.

Excellent Climate and Soil.

The climate is delightful, with much bright sunshine, yet a plentiful supply of rain; abundant breezes, but no cyclones; never a trace of frost, but very little excessive heat. The soil is fertile, and nearly everything which grows in warm, temperate or subtropical countries can be grown on Lord Howe. The island has such a tropical appearance and there are so many palms that the entire absence of coconuts is striking. The explanation is that the mean annual temperature is not high enough for that heat-loving palm.

With the discovery of petroleum the decline of the whaling fleet began and hard times came to Lord Howe. Without the whalers, there was no market for the produce, both Australia and New Zealand being too far away.

But necessity often leads to discoveries which prove epoch-making, and so it proved in this case.

There is no record of who first noticed the unusual hardiness of the palms growing so abundantly or who was first to offer them for sale. But a demand for the palms from Lord Howe gradually developed, and long before the Twentieth century dawned they were in use all over the world wherever there were florists.

Four Kinds of Residents.

Governmental machinery is simple. Local affairs are handled by a local committee of three, chosen by the islanders themselves. The marketing of the palm seeds and relations with the Australian government are handled by the Lord Howe Island board of control, composed of three New South Wales officials in Sydney, the island being politically a dependency of that state.

The residents on the island are divided by two lines of cleavage into four natural groups; one line separates those born on Lord Howe, and hence known as "islanders," from those born elsewhere, and so known as "non-islanders." This cleavage is not the basis of a social distinction; if the islanders look down on the non-islanders they conceal their feelings perfectly.

The second line of cleavage separates "participants" from "non-participants," an economic division of the island's income from the sale of the palm seeds. To be a participant one must be an islander, or else married to an islander, and a resident for ten years or more.

The degree of participation depends on age and sex. All males twenty-one years of age, or more have 25 shares in the allotment. Women of like age have 10 shares, but on marriage their holding is increased to 25 shares. A married couple will thus have 50 shares when starting their home. For each child born to them 10 additional shares come to them, with a maximum of 35 shares for children.

At the present time the population of the island is less than 150 and the number of participants scarcely half that. The non-participant group consists partly of non-islanders employed in various occupations.

Mile-Deep Canyons Found in Atlantic Off Jersey Coast

U. S. Coast Survey Ship Reports Unusual Finding

DISCOVERY of three vast submarine canyons, hitherto unknown to science, is reported by Prof. Francis P. Shepard, who has just returned to Washington, D. C, from a cruise on the U. S. coast survey ship Oceanographer. Professor Shepard's participation in the survey was assisted by a grant from the Geological Society of America

The canyons are cut deep into the sea bottom off the middle Atlantic region of the United States. They lie to the southwest of the great submarine Hudson canyon, which continues the Hudson valley far under the ocean from the mouth of the present Hudson river.

7,000 Feet Below Sea.

Greatest depth of the floors of the three new-found canyons is 7,000 feet below sea level. Their walls rise above this level 1,000, 1,500 and 2,000 feet respectively.

The deepest of the three is the southernmost. This canyon is located approximately off Toms river, New Jersey, and cuts back into the continental shelf for about three miles. The other two terminate headward below the shelf margin.

All of these canyons extend directly down the continental shelf slope in the direction which would be expected of streams if the sea level were lowered, and their shapes are decidedly those of stream-cut canyons.

Scientist Makes Soundings.

Professor Shepard has plotted the 4,700 soundings of the recent Hudson canyon survey on a large scale. He states: "This is the most complete deepwater survey ever made and probably the most successful of the surveys to date The canyon is much straighter than previously supposed, being practically identical in character with the canyons off Georges Bank in having a maximum wall height of 4,000 feet; but the hundred-fathom curve is bent shoreward 16 miles as compared to 13 for the largest of the Georges canyons The walls are not quite as deep in the case of the Hudson canyon The bottom declivity is fairly uniform but shows an increase between 3,500 and 4,500 feet, which is probably due to the outcrop of a harder layer along the canyon course.

"Inside the canyon, as was known previously, a valley only about sixty feet deep extends almost into New York. This shallow valley is only a few feep deep where it joins the head of the canyon."

Okapi, Cousin of Giraffe, 30 Million Years Out of Step

PHILADELPHIA. — Okapi, queer-looking jungle cousin of the giraffe and one of the world's rarest mammals, is a "living fossil," 30 million years out of step with the times.

This is the verdict rendered to the American Society of Mammalogists at their meeting here, by Edwin H. Colbert, research worker at the American Museum of Natural History.

Is Almost Extinct.

Mr. Colbert has made a careful examinatio nof okapi skeletal material, and finds that though the animal is related to the modern giraffe, it is in all respects more primitive than any fossil giraffe known. He considers it to be more like what an ancestor-giraffe might have been, back in Miocene times, 30 million years ago.

Although not an extinct animal, the okapi is apparently about as near extinction as a species can get, and still survive. It was never seen by white men until the beginning of the present century, when its discovery by Sir Harry Johnston, then governor of the British province of Uganda in Africa, caused a furor in the scientific world and even a newspaper sensation.

Five-Year Closed Season Asked for Fur Animals

WASHINGTON.—Five years of complete protection for three valuable fur-bearing animals, marten, fisher and wolverine, are asked by Ira N. Gabrielson, chief of the bureau of biological survey, United States Department of Agriculture. Although several states have given this protection within their borders, others have not.

One of the reasons why their numbers have been rapidly reduced, Mr. Gabrielson states, is that they have been subjected to unrestricted trapping during the critical months before the birth of the young, so that the killing of a single female has meant the wiping out of a whole brood.

In Ancient Nile Mud
England Keeps Ready
Let the Dead Sleep
Murder Starts Early

Paris.—Reclining on her side, her body covered with gold, gold necklaces on her neck and on the ground nearby, archaeologists discover the well-preserved body of an Egyptian princess whose father, the Pharoah Chephren, built the second biggest pyramid; it was his brother, Cheops, who built the largest.

Arthur Brisbane

Those pyramids were tombs for kings, and searchers found the princess in one of them. The Nile mud seeping into the tomb had helped to preserve her.

That princess, living 5,000 years ago, could tell an interesting story for the movies She "built herself a small pyramid with stones given to her by her many lovers." Where do you suppose she is now? In some strange Egyptian heaven, perhaps, with all those admirers around her.

England, alarmed by European war threats, issues an official "white paper" explaining why—

"The relation of our own armed forces to those of other great powers should be maintained at a figure high enough to enable us to exercise our influence and authority in international affairs."

Unfortunately for all plans, the airplane in the hands of a desperate nation might upset all national "authority," just as a pistol in the hands of a desperate man upsets individual and police authority.

One bullet will stretch individual authority in the dust; 1,000 airplanes, attacking the heart of a great city, might cause national "authority" to end in demoralization.

England's new defense increase will be largely in her air force; that wise nation knows that the real "ocean" in future wars will be the ocean of the air.

In a desert of southeastern Utah, men and women, belonging to the cult of "truth seekers," were gathered around the body of Mrs. Edith Dakhal, who died more than a year ago. You read about it, perhaps.

Mrs. Ogden, leader of the "truth seekers," prayed over the body, which appeared marvelously preserved. The "truth seekers" believe they will bring the woman back to life, but the pathetic fact is that it would not in the least matter if they did.

The important thing is to improve the condition of 1,800,000,000 actually living on the earth. For one safely out of it to be brought back would be unimportant, in these days, and perhaps cruel.

---

America holds the world's "murder championship" for all kinds of murder, at all ages—quantity, quality, variety, volume.

A New Jersey boy, 16 years old, was sentenced to death.

In Wisconsin, a coroner reports that little David Holl, two months old, was killed by two boys four and three years of age.

They each held one hand of the younger one, and dropped it on the floor. It cried and would not stop. Then, one of the small boys explained, "We pounded him." These youngest "killers" puzzle the law. You can't "try" a four-year-old child.

---

Railroads tell the interstate commerce commission they would like fares reduced to two and a half cents a mile, instead of two cents. The railroads should have all possible consideration, for they have built up this country, but at two and a half cents a mile they will not compete successfully with automobiles carrying passengers for one-quarter of a cent a mile.

---

New York proposes to fingerprint everybody, new babies included. The baby of the future will be busy, with finger-printing, tonsil and appendix removal, vaccination for smallpox and a half dozen other diseases.

---

The new treaty with France, reducing the duty on French wines and liquors by 50 per cent, interests California and other wine growing states. It should persuade them to stabilize the production of wines, establish official guarantees of purity, freedom from adulterations, mixtures, and especially "fortifying" with alcohol.

In Europe, notably in France, adulteration of wines is an offense against the law. With us, it is a business.

For advertising reasons, a group of men made a long distance hike on a diet of broken grain to prove the superiority of that diet. They were surprised when 53 hikers showed a total loss of 211 pounds in weight, while one, 66 years old, showed a gain of three pounds.

SUMMER RECIPES CALLING FOR USE OF FRESH FRUITS

Now that summer days are at hand, the alert woman is interested in successful recipes calling for the use of fresh fruits Here are three that have been thoroughly tested:

Fresh Fruit Pies

For rhubarb, plum, grape, strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, blueberry or huckleberry pie:

Combine 3½ cups prepared fruit, 1½ to 2½ tablespoons quick-cooking tapioca and 1 to 1¼ cups sugar Let stand 15 minutes, or while pastry is being made Use as filling for 9-inch pie

Fresh Peach and Banana Mold

1 package lime flavored gelatin
1 pint warm water
½ cup fresh peaches, sliced
1 banana, sliced

Dissolve lime flavored gelatin in warm water. Arrange sliced peaches on bottom of mold. Pour on warm gelatin, being careful not to disarrange peaches. Add banana Chill until firm. Unmold. Garnish with whipped cream, if desired Serves six

Ripe Pear Jam

4 cups (2 lbs.) prepared fruit
7½ cups (3¼ lbs.) sugar
1 bottle pectin

Peel, core, and crush completely, or grind, about 3 pounds fully ripe pears. If desired, about 3 teaspoons spice may be added.

Measure sugar and prepared fruit into large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling Boil hard one minute. Remove from fire and stir in pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just five minutes to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin and cover as above. Makes about 11 glasses (6 fluid oz. each)

Week's Supply of Postum Free

Read the offer made by the Postum Company in another part of this paper. They will send a full week's supply of health giving Postum free to anyone who writes for it.—Adv.

Smiles

Foreign Sunset

"This is a sunset my daughter painted. She studied painting abroad, you know."

"Ah, that accounts for it! I never saw a sunset like that in this country."

Any Port

First Castaway—Do you see anything?

Second Castaway — Only the horizon.

First Castaway—Well, pull for that. It's better than nothing.

On the Tone Beat

Head Cook—Didn't I tell you to notice when the soup boiled over?

Assistant—I did It was half past ten.

Hobson's Choice

The quotation, "Hobson's choice," came into being as the result of the eccentricity of Tobias Hobson, an English stable owner. When a man came to him to rent a horse, he was shown a number of animals in the stable, but Hobson always insisted that he take the horse which stood next to the stable door. "Hobson's choice" was thus born to indicate that although the selection was supposedly yours, that of another person was forced upon you.

AUCTION SALE

I will offer at public auction to the highest bidder (if any) at what is known as the White House Washington, D. C., starting at 10 a. m. on or about March 4th, 1937, the following described non-usable property, to-wit:

One Democratic Platform, has never been used, therefore good as new. One Burr-tailed Donkey, quite aged and wobbly, but a good eater and brayer

One Car-Load Mixed Feeding Cattle, if not shot before day of sale; Bones of 12,000,000 Little Pigs died from ravages of Three-A bunk

One boon-doggling Congress, sired by Dictator and Damned by Everybody; 4-3-4 bu 3-A Potatoes each and every one stamped and wrapped in rool tissue; 150,000 bu 3-A Seed Corn, raised in South America, free from the Corn-Hog blight.

Some Canadian Seed Wheat, fine for resowing American plowed-under areas, 123,542 fine Corn-Hog contracts, would make good papier-mache carnival hats.

10½ carloads NRA Code Jokes, nothing better for feeding young goats; One lot of Alphabet Blocks extra fine for juggling acts in amateur vaudeville

One big Chisel, badly gapped by constant chiseling into public money box, but could be converted into a good garden trowel.

One bale Cotton-Control Dope might be usable yet on cottontail rabbits

Vote-Baiting Relief Fol-De-Rol, grandest collection ever shown under one tent, including down-and-out writer projects, rag-doll fantasies, tin-can daublings; national youth ticklers, $50,000 ten-cent pension probes, alphabetical tom-tits for making district and regional white collar pads, hat stretchers, slop jars, self pinning adjustable badges, Hopkinated electro non-talking check grinding machines.

All farmers who expect to go back to farming in 1937 should attend this sale. Special rates for those who walk.

Free lunch on the grounds consisting of Alphabet Soup, Non-Constitutional Sandwiches, Blue Eagle Gravy, 3-A 'Tater Balls, and Corn-Hog Julep

EAGLE NOT A KIDNAPER

Despite the fact that the eagle is our national bird the story-tellers have given him a black history with tales of the majestic bird carrying off little children. According to the Association of Audubon Societies such a feat would be an impossibility since actual tests have shown that an eagle is unable to lift and carry more than its own weight. Only in rare cases do eagles attain a weight of more than nine or ten pounds and children that small are not likely to be exposed to such dangers. Such stories probably originated in ancient folk-lore and mythology of which the adventure of Sinbad the Sailor and the roc is a fair example.

Liberty League Declares Stand

Says Fight for Constitution Will Continue; Hits Farley.

After almost two years of educational work along constitutional and economic lines the American Liberty League has announced that it "will continue to carry forward in the most earnest manner possible its campaign."

The League's statement was issued by its Executive Committee after a meeting in New York. The purposes and methods of the League are set forth as follows:

"The American Liberty League was created as a non-partisan organization to defend our traditional constitutional system of government against the many attacks being made upon it. By a campaign of education and by factual analyses of legislative proposals the League has endeavored to bring clearly before the people the efforts that are being made to substitute unsuccessful and discredited experiments for our accepted form of government. To the course outlined in the beginning the League has rigidly adhered. It has been forced to take public issue with many legislative and administrative activities of the Roosevelt administration, because daily the fact has become more clear that they are destructive to our institutions and intended to transform the fundamental principles of our government.

Not Political Party

"Time has confirmed the League's opinion. The Supreme Court in repeated decisions has condemned key measures of the New Deal in language more emphatic than the League has ventured. The press, too, has spoken overwhelmingly in no uncertain words.

"Three months ago the Executive Committee of the American Liberty League in a public statement called attention to the fact that the League is not a political party nor is it interested in promoting the special interests of any individual or any group. It emphasized that the League's membership is composed of thousands of Democrats and thousands of Republicans, and that the League intends in the future as in the past to adhere faithfully to the principles responsible for its organization."

"The League will continue to carry forward in the most earnest manner possible its campaign of education as to constitutional rights; it will continue to condemn members of any party who seek—either openly or by subterfuge—to pervert the American constitutional system or to destroy or to infringe upon the rights of the people as guaranteed in the Constitution.

Farley Is Rebuked

The League's statement rebuked James A. Farley as follows:

"Heretofore the American Liberty League has not attempted to defend itself against the malicious defamation and vituperation uttered by spokesmen for the New Deal. It glories in the fact that its advocacy of constitutional principles has aroused the bitter enmity of men who would overthrow those principles There is, however, one false accusation made by a man holding a responsible public office which the League feels it necessary to call to definite attention.

"James A. Farley, Postmaster General of the United States, in his capacity as party Chairman, made the following statement in his speech opening the New Deal Convention at Philadelphia last week:

" 'Behind the Republican ticket is the crew of the du Pont Liberty League and their allies, allies, which have so far financed every under-cover agency that has disgraced American politics with their appeals to race prejudice, religious intolerance and personalities so gross that they had to be repudiated by the regular Republican organization. They will continue to disown these smear assaults—and to seek to purge by them.'

"Such false and defamatory language goes beyond the limit of self-respect and cannot remain unnoticed. It is incredible that any man, no matter what his background, occupying high official position would in any circumstance make such representation without convincing evidence.

"The American Liberty League challenges Mr. Farley to produce complete evidence in support of his statement that the League has financed any 'UNDER-COVER AGENCY THAT HAS DISGRACED AMERICAN POLITICS WITH THEIR APPEALS TO RACE PREJUDICE, RELIGIOUS INTOLERANCE,' etc."

The challenge to Mr. Farley to produce evidence was first published on July 1 and has had country-wide publicity. Ten days later no answer had been made by Mr. Farley and his silence was regarded as indicating that his statement was baseless and would not be defended.

FIRST GRADE QUALITY—The new Firestone Standard Tire is built of first grade materials, by skilled workmen, and embodies the Firestone patented construction features of Gum-Dipping and two extra layers of Gum-Dipped cords under the tread.

GUM-DIPPED CORD BODY—Every cotton fibre in every cord in every ply is soaked in liquid rubber. This is the only process known that prevents internal friction and heat, providing greater strength, blowout protection and longer life.

TWO EXTRA LAYERS OF GUM-DIPPED CORDS UNDER THE TREAD—This patented Firestone feature binds the whole tire into one unit of greater strength, cushions road shocks, gives extra protection against punctures.

LONGER NON-SKID MILEAGE—The new scientifically designed non-skid tread is wider, latter, with more and tougher rubber on the road, giving long even wear and thousands of extra miles.

LOW PRICES—These low prices are made possible by volume production in the world's most efficient factories.

THE FIRESTONE NAME AND GUARANTEE—Every Firestone Standard Tire bears the Firestone name, your guarantee of greater safety, dependability and economy.

FOR TRUCKS AND BUSES

FIRST GRADE MATERIALS AND EXPERT WORKMANSHIP—The Firestone Standard Truck Tire gives long mileage—blowout protection—dependable service.

GUM-DIPPED CORD BODY—Gum-Dipping prevents internal friction and heat, giving greater blowout protection.

TWO EXTRA LAYERS OF GUM-DIPPED CORDS UNDER THE TREAD—Binds the tread and cord body into one inseparable unit. Specially compounded rubber in two outer plies from bead to bead rivets sidewalls securely to cord body.

WIN BEADS WITH CORD REINFORCE—In larger sizes twin beads are used to give true firm seat on rim. The beads are tied into the cord body by the special Firestone method of cord reinforcement.

FIRESTONE NAME AND GUARANTEE—Assures truck and bus owners greater safety, dependability and economy.

Landon Pledges Jobs, Lower Cost of Government, and Aid to Farmers

80,000 Assemble to Hear Candidate Voice Plans and Criticize New Deal Incompetency.

PRAIRIE STATE GOVERNOR SPEAKS

Excerpts follow from the acceptance speech of Gov. Alf M. Landon, delivered at Topeka, Kas., July 23, 1936:

"The (1936) record shows the primary need is still for jobs for unemployed."

"Those who need relief will get it."

"Mounting debts and taxes constitute a threat to all (our) aims."

"No sound national policy will neglect the farmer . . . the administration has taken the American farmer out of foreign markets and put the foreign farmer into the American market."

"The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer . . . plant, craft or industry . . . free from interference from any source."

"Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive, or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

Topeka, Kas.—With all the impressive simplicity and the compelling earnestness of a Lincoln, Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, "a typical prairie state," made his speech accepting the Republican nomination for President July 23 before an audience of nearly 80,000 gathered at the south entrance of the Kansas state house.

His address was in reply to the official notification given him by Representative Bertrand H. Snell of New York, that the Republican party had conferred upon him its highest honor. Besides the wildly enthusiastic throng who filled Topeka to overflowing, Governor Landon's talk was heard by millions of radio listeners.

The first sentence of his speech accepted the honor. His second: "In accepting this leadership I pray for Divine Guidance to make me worthy of the faith and the confidence which you have shown in me," adding: "Facing this honor and responsibility, I hope for the gift of simple and straightforward speech. I want every man and woman in this nation to understand my every word, for I speak of issues deeply concerning us all."

"Short of Success"

Governor Landon first dealt with the social policies of relief and unemployment, declaring "The New Deal has fallen far short of success," and went on to explain his plans to correct the evils. Make the Social Security act "workable," freed from "political exploiters," he urged, and pledged his party never to neglect the obligations to the unemployed.

He next scored rising public debts and taxes and the "uncertainties" of the present administration's policies which have frightened the average American and prevented the launching of new enterprises which would promote recovery.

He rapped the New Deal with "The most important question now before us: Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

The address concluded with a succinct series of statements as to his belief in Constitutional government and his proposals for the executive policies, if elected. Summarized, these were:

"The Republican party does not believe the people wish to abandon the American form of government.

"We propose to maintain the Constitutional balance of power between the states and the federal government.

"We propose to use the full power of the federal government to break up private monopolies.

Rights of People.

"A free competitive system is necessary to a free government.

"Neither political nor civil liberty long survives the loss of economic liberty. Each and all of these liberties, with the precious human rights which they involve, must be preserved intact and inviolate.

"I propose to restore our government to an efficient as well as Constitutional basis.

"I shall co-operate wholeheartedly with congress in an effective reorganization of government agencies, to eliminate duplication, to insure better administration, and to save the taxpayers' money.

"It is the right of our people to have their government well administered.

"These are some of the aims and proposals of a Republican administration (pledged) to conduct the public business with honesty, frugality, courage and common sense.

"I look forward to the America that is to be.

"It should be a nation in which the old wrong things are going out and the new right things are coming in.

"It should be a country which produces more and more until there is plenty for all, with a fair chance for all to earn their share.

"It should be a land in which equal opportunity shall prevail and special privilege shall have no place.

"It should be an America that shall . . . drive the curse of war from the earth; an America that, for the sake of all mankind as well as ourselves, shall never lose the faith that human freedom is a practical ideal.

"Everything we need for realization (of these aims) we can find within the principles under which this nation has grown to greatness.

"God grant us, one and all, the strength and the wisdom to do our part in bringing these things to pass."

Early in his address, Governor Landon pledged himself to the Republican platform with the words: "The 1936 platform has my complete adherence. It sets out the principles by which we can achieve the full national life that our resources entitle us to enjoy."

His reference to the question of how many promises the present administration has broken, was: "The citizen who assumes the direction of the Executive branch takes an oath that he will, to the best of his ability, 'preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States.' No man, in common good faith to his fellow citizens, may rightfully assume the duties of the high office of Chief Executive and take the oath unless he shall keep his oath inviolate. It is with a full understanding of the meaning of this oath that I accept this nomination."

On relief and unemployment Governor Landon committed himself to the policy: "Those who need relief will get it. . . . We will not take our economies out of the unemployed. We will take them out of the hides of political exploiters. The whole American people want to work at full time and full pay (with) the right to live according to American standards. . . . The (1933) record showed the primary need was jobs for unemployed. The (1936) record shows the primary need is still for jobs for unemployed . . . The New Deal has fallen far short of success.

American initiative is not a commodity to be delivered by the pound, through some government bureau.

Governmental Intimidation.

"We must be freed from incessant governmental intimidation and hostility. We must be freed from excessive expenditures and crippling taxation. We must be freed from an arbitrary and uncertain monetary policy. We must be freed from private monopolistic control. Once these things are done the energies of the American economic system will remedy the ravages of depression and restore full employment.

"The security of us all depends on the good management of our common affairs," was the keynote of his economic theme. "We must be able to produce and accumulate enough to finance our normal progress. Mounting debts and increasing taxes constitute a threat to all of these aims.

"Taxes add to the price of everything. By taking more out of the family purse they leave less for family security. Let us not be misled by those who tell us others will be made to carry the burden. Even if we tax to the limit those best able to pay, the average taxpayer will still have to bear the major part. For every single dollar spent, we will pay back two dollars.

People Finally Pay.

"Crushing debts and taxes are usually incurred, as today, under the guise of helping people—the same people who must finally pay them."

As to national agriculture, Governor Landon stated flatly:

"No sound national policy will neglect the farmer, because the needs of a great nation require that its food producers always stand upon a plane in keeping with the importance of their service." He accused the present administration of having "taken the American farmer out of foreign markets, and put the foreign farmer into the American market," adding: "The loss of markets both at home and abroad far outweighs the value of all the benefits paid to farmers.

He declared American farmers are "entitled to all of the home market they can supply without injustice to the consumer. We propose a policy to protect them in this right."

He declared for soil conservation, and for protection of "the wealth of the soil"; for flood prevention and "national land use" programs; for "widespread ownership of medium-sized tracts," according to the Republican Homestead act; and for maintenance of "opportunity" to all in agriculture.

"We shall fulfill its (the platform's) pledge to give every reasonable assistance to producers in areas suffering from afflictions," he promised, and charged the Roosevelt administration with having "[illegible] with the needed feed and food supplies, through its program of scarcity." It overlooked the fact that Mother Nature cannot be regimented," he said. "The time has now come (to) replace this futile program with one economically and socially right."

Right to Organize.

On the subject of labor, he recognized the rights and usefulness of organized labor, and added: "The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer, whether it covers their plant, craft, or industry . . . free from interference from any source."

Discussing "the basic principles upon which our Nation is founded," he said: "The prime needs of men have not changed since the Declaration. The people themselves set up this government . . . any change which the people want they can have. . . . But for any official or branch . . . to attempt such change without authority from the people, is to do an unwarranted and illegal act."

"There has now appeared the impulse to take away and lodge with the Chief Executive, without the people's consent, the powers which they have kept in their state governments or reserved to themselves. It is not my belief that the Constitution is above change. But change must come through the people and not by usurpation."

Reading His Speech.

This hitherto unpublished picture of Governor Alf M. Landon was taken at his desk in Topeka, Kas., as he was making the final revision of his speech of acceptance.

"By Deeds Performed and Promises Fulfilled"

Topeka, Kas.—Excerpts follow from the address by Representative Bertrand H. Snell notifying Governor Alf M. Landon of his selection as the Republican presidential nominee.

"Here and now this nation turns its back forever upon broken promises and hollow oaths!"

"The spontaneous expression of popular sentiment from coast to coast, which culminated in your nomination at Cleveland, offers eloquent testimony that your authority is rooted in the silent, secret hearts of the whole people."

* * *

"The crisis which calls you to be first among us will never yield to the sounding shibboleths of mere partisanship. You are saluted today by patriots of all parties!"

* * *

"Here in a solvent Kansas the people found a man who worked calmly amid all the noisy din of the New Deal's failures and false starts. They found a man who kept his books and the books of his government by simple, honest, old-fashioned arithmetic . . . a man who stood like a rock against the hallucinations of those who supposed that they could guide America to stability and prosperity by shameful political squandering of the people's substance. In this choice our people are guided by deeds performed and promises fulfilled!"

* * *

"As you set forth upon your high endeavor, carry in your heart the message of this hour:

America is with you!
America will sustain you!
America will see you through to victory!"

TOAD ENTOMBED 27 YEARS

A toad entombed in a cavity in a concrete wall 27 years ago was liberated last week. The toad hopped around for a few minutes, then keeled over, a victim of the heat. This took place at Estherville.

Landon and Lowden Are In Accord on Agriculture

COMPLETE endorsement of the presidential candidacy of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas was given by former Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois following a conference in Topeka. Following the conference former Governor Lowden announced that he and Governor Landon were in "full accord" on the question of farm relief.

Frank O. Lowden

The Illinois farm leader revealed that he had discussed soil erosion, reciprocal treaties, conservation of farm population, government aid in marketing surplus crops, centralizing of federal power and reduction of federal expenditures with Gov. Landon. Mr. Lowden declared:

"We are in accord on the important agricultural issues. I shall support him and campaign for his election."

Payment of cash federal bounties to soil - conserving farmers through a plan contemplating state administration was one of the farm principles advocated by Mr. Lowden which received the verbal support of Gov. Landon following the conference.

With the Republican presidential nominee at work on his acceptance speech, conferences with other leaders were scheduled. Important among these was the visit of George N. Peek, former AAA administrator who resigned his post following a break with Secretary of Agriculture Wallace and is now a New Deal critic. Also on the program was the visit of Col. Frank Knox, Governor Landon's running mate.

At Governor Landon's office a letter was made public from William Cabell Bruce, former Democratic senator from Maryland, saying that he was "bitterly disappointed" in President Roosevelt and "deeply gratified" at Governor Landon's nomination

In the meantime members of the Kansas legislature had departed for their homes after submitting two constitutional amendments to the state's electorate. One of these would authorize state aid for the needy and the other would approve state participation in the federal social security plan. Both amendments were recommended by Governor Landon.

Dr. S. Parkes Cadman Is Taken by Death

DR. S. Parkes Cadman, who rose from the mines of England to international fame as a pulpit orator, died in Plattsburg, N. Y., at the age of seventy-one.

Dr. Cadman was pastor of the Central Congregational church of Brooklyn and was a former president of the Federal Council of Churches.

In his youth, Dr. Cadman worked as a "pony boy" in a mine in Shropshire, England. At fourteen he began to read theology; at seventeen he joined the church and at eighteen preached his first sermon. He came to America in 1890 with less than $100 in his pocket. Through a bishop whom he had met in London he obtained his first pastorate.

In his later years, Dr. Cadman had for his congregation all the people of the North American continent. He was the first of the "radio pastors" and his Sunday afternoon sermons reached the ears of millions.

New Austro-German Pact Makes Diplomatic History

A NEW era in European diplomacy was heralded with the signing of a treaty between Germany and Austria re-establishing peace and normal relations between the two nations.

Since Italy has been acting in the role of big brother to Austria in the past two years it was regarded as a virtual certainty that Premier Mussolini had sanctioned the new pact. Observers pointed out that with Germany, Austria and Italy in accord and with Poland friendly to Hitler's aims, Europe now has a prospective alliance more powerful than the triple alliance of Germany, Italy and Austria-Hungary preceding the World war.

By the terms of the new Austro-German pact, the sovereignty of Austria is guaranteed, a friendly attitude by Austria toward Germany is promised, amnesty to Nazi agitators in Austria is given and freedom of Austrian Nazi now interned in Germany is permitted.

In sealing the Austro-German agreement Chancellor Kurt Schuschnigg of Austria wired a message of congratulations to Chancellor Hitler expressing his conviction that the agreement "would be to the advantage of the whole German people." In replying Hitler expressed the wish "that this agreement will re-establish the old traditional relations springing from racial unity and the centuries long common history" of the two peoples. It is understood that both Hitler and Schuschnigg will meet in the near future, probably at Hitler's summer home at Berchtesgaden.

In diplomatic circles the signing of the new pact was regarded as another shrewd coup by Chancellor Hitler and Premier Mussolini. The German and Italian dictators have thrust a dictatorially governed Fascist and Nazi wedge through central Europe from the North Sea to the Mediterranean.

In Paris, French officials were quoted as seeing in the new agreement an initial step toward German annexation of the Austrian republic without resorting to war. They declared their belief that Hitler's actual entry into Vienna is now only a question of time.

President Roosevelt Leaves for Nautical Vacation

AFTER dedicating New York's new $64,000,000 Tri - borough bridge, attending the wedding of Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark, to Captain Boerge Rohde of the Danish court and spending two days at his Hyde Park home, President Roosevelt embarked on a nautical vacation in Maine and Canadian waters.

President Roosevelt

On the bridge dedication program with the President were Secretary of the Interior Ickes, Gov. Lehman of New York, Senator Wagner and Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York City. The bridge is the largest completed public works administration project in the East. It comprises four spans in its three and one-half miles of elevated ways and connects Manhattan, the Bronx and Queens, Long Island.

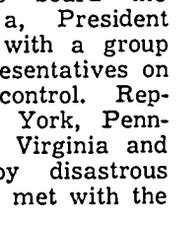
Before leaving to board the schooner Sewanna, President Roosevelt conferred with a group of eastern state representatives on the matter of flood control. Representatives of New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia and other states hit by disastrous floods early this year met with the President.

On the cruise of the Sewanna, a 50-foot schooner yacht, President Roosevelt will act as skipper and helmsman. Three of his four sons, James, Franklin Jr., and John are members of the crew. The cruise will carry the President along the Maine coast to Campobello Island, New Brunswick, where his mother has a summer home and off Nova Scotia where he expects to do some deep sea fishing. A destroyer, the presidential yacht Potomac and the schooner Liberty carrying newspaper men are trailing the Sewanna.

Before he returns to the White House, the President will pay a visit to Lord Tweedsmuir, governor-general of Canada at Ottawa, the Dominion's capital.

Ruth Bryan Owen Becomes Bride of Danish Officer

ROMANCE outmaneuvered diplomacy when Mrs. Ruth Bryan Owen, minister to Denmark, became the bride of Captain Boerge Rohde, gentleman-in-waiting to King Christian of Denmark. The wedding took place in St. James Chapel at Hyde Park, N. Y., in the presence of President Roosevelt who nominated Mrs. Owen as the country's first woman minister.



Ruth Bryan Owen

A few days after Mrs. Owen returned to the United States for the summer, the announcement of her engagement was made in Denmark by Captain Rohde's mother. A day or two later, Captain Rohde arrived in America and plans were made for an immediate wedding.

Rockefeller Celebrates His 97th Birthday

CUTTING a big cake to celebrate his ninety-seventh birthday, John D. Rockefeller predicted that he would live to be one hundred. Despite temperature of 92 in the shade, the famous nonagenarian donned a sun helmet and went outdoors on his summer estate near Lakewood, N. J.

The multimillionaire oil man and philanthropist did not let the celebration of his birthday interfere with his daily nap or his daily afternoon automobile ride.

Mr. Rockefeller long since has given up all forms of athletic activities, including golf, formerly his favorite pastime.

Promise of Rains and Cooler Weather for Drouth Areas

WITH a recession of the extremely high temperatures promised and the prospect of rains, some measure of relief was in sight for the sun-parched drouth areas of the Great Plains. Rains which fell in portions of the Northwest revived scattered areas. But for day after day a record-breaking heat wave had brought temperatures ranging from 90 to 114 from the Rocky Mountains to the Appalachians.

Twenty-three states, eight of them in the South, were listed as suffering in some degree from the drouth. Ten of them—North and South Dakota, Montana, Wyoming, Minnesota, Missouri, Tennessee, Oklahoma, Virginia and South Carolina—were already in a critical stage. Five others—Kentucky Georgia, Alabama, North Carolina and West Virginia—were borderline cases. Eight others where the full severity of the drouth had not yet been felt were: Nebraska, Wisconsin, Iowa, Michigan, Illinois, Kansas, Indiana and Ohio.

The sweltering heat and drouth spread into Canada. The prairie provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta—Canada's bread basket—had begun to suffer like their neighbors in the United States. Except for scattered local showers, there had been no rain from Ontario westward to the Canadian Rockies since June 16.

With the full extent of the damage in the "dust bowl" area of the Northwest not yet known, the federal government made plans to deal with a long-range disaster. President Roosevelt, taking personal command of the relief program in Washington, announced that he would make a personal tour of the drouth-stricken areas within the next few weeks.

The President announced that the federal government had prepared a comprehensive plan whereby 170,000 out of 204,000 farm families impoverished by the drouth in the Northwest would be given immediate cash assistance. He declared that he will make his trip after the relief program has had an opportunity to get under way.

Green-Lewis Rift Brings Labor Crisis

AS THE long-awaited campaign to unionize the nation's steel industry was under way, one of the most serious crises in the history of the American labor movement arose when strife broke out between William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor and John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and head of the Committee for Industrial Organization, who has promoted the unionization drive in the steel industry.

William Green

Meeting in Washington, the executive council of the American Federation of Labor considered the matter of suspending eight national and international unions on the ground that these eight unions have begun the formation of a rival, or dual labor federation.

John L. Lewis announced that he would not respond to a summons of the executive council to answer charges that he had violated the federation's policy by trying to organize 500,000 steel workers into one big industrial union instead of into several unions divided by crafts.

Threat of Farm Strike Worries French Nation

WITH the threat of a farm strike hanging ominously over France, riots in French cities and street clashes between the leftists supporting the popular front socialist regime of Premier Leon Blum and rightists who oppose it added to the unrest. The government made anxious efforts to dissuade farm workers from going on a strike for higher pay and better wages.

On five farms near Paris striking farm hands had actually occupied the land While this was a localized situation, it was fraught with dangerous possibilities because the area affected not only provides most of the French capital's fresh vegetable supply but is an important wheat growing region as well.

Due to heavy rains and hot weather the wheat has ripened at an abnormally rapid rate. Should a widespread strike of farm hands occur that delayed the wheat cutting only a few days, experts were of the opinion that the entire crop of the region would be lost.

Fifteen Jap Army Officers Are Put to Death

FIFTEEN Japanese army officers who were leaders in last February's bloody rebellion in which four high-ranking government officials met assassination, were executed by a firing squad in Tokyo.

Two other officers condemned to death were not shot and no explanation was made by the war office. They were Captain Yoshiaki Nakamura and Captan Asiachi Isobe. Unofficial observers believed their lives were temporarily spared so that they might testify in trials of other men accused of complicity in the uprising of February 26 which pushed Japan close to the brink of civil war.

CHARLIE MAKES HIS BID!

HURRY UP! THE BOSS WON'T LIKE IT IF WE KEEP HIM WAITING! YOU KNOW HE WANTS TO TALK ABOUT THAT RAISE I ASKED FOR!
AW—TELL HER TO QUIT PAINTING HER FACE! YOU'RE GOING TO A BRIDGE GAME—NOT A WAR DANCE!
MR. COFFEE-NERVES
HELEN, I WISH YOU'D STOP THAT EVERLASTING HUMMING! LET'S QUIT THIS SILLY GAME, ANYHOW!
THAT'S THE STUFF! THROW DOWN YOUR CARDS—THAT ALWAYS BREAKS UP THE GAME!
ALL RIGHT—WE'LL GO IN THE STUDY WHILE YOU GIRLS FIX SOMETHING TO EAT!
ABOUT THAT RAISE, CHARLIE—I'M AFRAID YOU'RE NOT READY FOR IT YET—I DON'T BELIEVE YOU REALIZE HOW CROSS AND IRRITABLE YOU'VE BECOME!
SAY—YOU'D BE IRRITABLE, TOO, IF YOU HAD MY HEADACHES AND INDIGESTION!
STARTING TO CRITICIZE, IS HE? DON'T STAND FOR IT—TELL THIS TIGHT-FISTED SLAVE DRIVER WHERE TO GET OFF!
-SOUNDS LIKE COFFEE-NERVES! I HAD 'EM, UNTIL MY DOCTOR MADE ME SWITCH TO POSTUM—WHY DON'T YOU TRY POSTUM, AND SEE ME LATER ABOUT THAT RAISE?
WELL, MAYBE I WILL! I CAN'T FEEL ANY WORSE!
CURSES! I'LL HAVE TO SCRAM! POSTUM ALWAYS DRIVES ME OUT!
MR. COFFEE NERVES
30 DAYS LATER
I GOT MY RAISE TODAY! THE BOSS SAID HE'D NEVER SEEN SUCH A CHANGE IN A MAN!
OH, CHARLIE, THAT'S WONDERFUL! I KNEW IT WOULD COME SOON! YOU'VE BEEN SUCH A DEAR SINCE YOU SWITCHED TO POSTUM!
Paul ARTHUR

OF COURSE, children should never drink coffee. And many grown-ups, too, find that the caffein in coffee disagrees with them. If you are bothered by headaches or indigestion or can't sleep soundly...try Postum for 30 days. Postum contains no caffein. It is simply whole wheat and bran, roasted and slightly sweetened. Try Postum. You may miss coffee at first, but after 30 days you'll love Postum for its own rich, satisfying flavor. It is easy to make, delicious, economical, and may prove a real help. ### FIRE DANGER SERIOUS

In almost every State park and preserve the fire hazard has increased to its maximum seriousness through the extreme dry weather Several heavy losses have been suffered in the parks due to carelessness on the part of persons not putting out fires after preparing picnic meals and tossing burning cigarettes into dry grass.

The situation has become so serious in many parks that the Commission has prohibited building camp fires in numerous places In all parks and preserves permission must be obtained from the Custodian or caretaker to build a fire The Custodian knows which locations for fires are the most dangerous and whether or not conditions permit the building of any fires.

The Commission urges everyone to be careful about throwing lighted cigars and cigarettes from car windows or otherwise into the dry grass or brush along the roadside or in parks.

Indian Population Growing

According to Dr. Clark Wissler, of the American Museum of Natural History, the birth rate of the American Indian, generally considered a dying race, is almost twice that of the white race Dr Wissler says the Indian population on reservations is increasing so rapidly that the government will soon be faced with the problem of furnishing them with more land The present increase began in 1890 when the death rate, which prior to that time and following the placing of the red men on reservations had exceeded the birth rate and caused the population to decline, was checked.

Do Banks Want New Checking Accounts?

Yes, most banks welcome new checking accounts. At least, we know that our bank is glad to have them—for checking accounts constitute one of the most important financial services we render to the people of this community.

A checking account is a valuable service to depositors. Naturally it costs the bank money to handle every account. These expenses include check books, signature cards, deposit slips, and other supplies, and necessary time and cost of handling the account Consequently, the bank is obliged to make a moderate service charge

CRANK CASE OR CRUDE OIL WILL CHECK CHICKEN MITES

Mites—it's the season for them in chicken houses But it is possible to hold them in check by painting the roosts, dropping boards and walls after they are thoroughly cleaned with crude oil, waste crank case oil or a concentrated disinfectant

Some poultrymen add a small amount of strong disinfectant to oil which has been drained from the crank case of the car or tractor This effectively checks the mites

The overloading of boats, recently made unlawful, applies to the person who is renting the boat to use as well as the boat livery owner who permits the boat to leave his dock with more persons in the boat than the metal tag on the boat indicates. Many think that one person may rent the boat and then pick up others at another point on the lake and carry as many persons as they desire. This is unlawful and the person who has rented the boat from its owner is piolating the law and not the owner.

CATTLEMEN TO LEARN ABOUT OILMEAL TESTS

Results Of Experiments Will Be Announced At "Hey Day" Program

If soybean oilmeal will produce as good results as linseed oilmeal in fattening cattle its use generally will result in more profit to feeders because soybean oilmeal usually sells at a lower price

But soybean oilmeal has not given as good a finish and the cattle have sold at a lower price than those fattened on linseed oilmeal in the cattle feeding tests at Iowa State College, Ames, during the past 2 years

Sold At Lower Price

Last year the cattle fed soybean oilmeal gained as fast and really had as good finish as those getting linseed oilmeal, but they weren't as sleek in coat, didn't appear to have the finish and sold at a lower price To find whether or not it might be possible to feed soybean oilmeal during most of the feeding period and then switch to linseed oilmeal for a short time before the cattle are marketed and get a satisfactory finish one lot this year was fed for 6 months on soybean oilmeal and then linseed oilmeal for 2 months

In comparison with this lot are two other groups—one fed soybean oilmeal for the full 8 months and a check lot which got linseed oilmeal for the full feeding period The calves fattened on these rations will be shown the visitors who attend the Iowa Cattle Feeders' "Hey Day" Aug 14 at Ames

Used New Process Meal

Another feature of the experiments this year was to determine whether there is a difference in soybean oilmeal made by different processes One lot was fed the "new" process (solvent process) as the protein supplement for the full feeding period The "old" process (expeller process) meal is the usual brown, nutty flavored soybean oilmeal which has been sold This was used with one lot of calves for the full period and another lot was switched to linseed oilmeal

The gains of the calves on soybean oilmeal and linseed oilmeal have been much the same so far in the feeding period Which protein supplement will prove the more profitable will depend largely on how the cattle sell at the end of the feeding period They will be appraised by a packer buyer and a cattle salesman from one of the commission companies on cattle feeders' day so that those attending will get an idea of prices and how the returns from the different feed compare.

Honored At Picnic

SATURDAY NIGHT BATH

Gosh when Saturday night comes roun'
I'm the saddest kid in town
'Cause Ma'll say "Now peel yer duds
And crawl into that tub of suds!
Here's the towel and the soap
Now start scrubbin' and don't you mope!"

Through the winter 'taint so bad
But in the summer it makes me mad
Why, through all the swimmin' season
Seems that Ma don't use no reason,
Though I'm swimmin' every day
Ma'll say "Go bathe anyway!"

Jest the sound o' water heatin'
Makes my poor old heart start beatin'
Cause I sort o' have a fear
Bathin' time is drawing near,
And I spect most any minute
Ma'll tell me to go get in it'

But when I grow up, you bet
Many a bath night I'll forget
Many a bar o' soap I'll save
I won't be no bath tub slave!
And when Saturday night comes roun'
I'll skip my bath an' see the town!

Should Use Care Tossing Away Burning Cigarettes

WILL SELL 150,000 PIGS WITHIN NEXT 30 DAYS

Drouth Forces Swine Liquidation In Southwestern Iowa

More than 150,000 feeder pigs will have to be sold from 18 southern and western counties of Iowa within the next 30 days, in the opinion of county agricultural agents

A survey conducted by the Iowa State College Extension Service brought out the opinion that disposal of the spring pig crop will be the most serious of the livestock problems caused by the drouth Most of the roughage-consuming livestock in the state can be handled without much movement of stock from one section to another if all available roughage is saved.

The survey also indicated that there is a demand for additional feeder pigs among farmers in northern and eastern counties Farmers in counties where there is a demand for feeder pigs may obtain lists of men having pigs for sale from county agents in drouth-hit counties.

Chance For Profit

Purchase of feeder pigs from the drouth sections offers a chance for profit to farmers who are in position to feed for the late winter market Prices of finished hogs from mid-winter on are expected to be quite favorable Large numbers of lightweight hogs are expected to be put on the market during the summer and fall This will reduce supplies for the late winter market

New oats, barley, wheat and available corn may be efficiently utilized in feeding out pigs. Before purchasing, it will be of advantage to prospective buyers to see the pigs on the farms where raised in order to check on health and general condition of the pigs.

On Vacation Trip To Southwest

Dr and Mrs. A. H. Dulmes, accompanied by the doctor's parents Mr and Mrs. Dulmes of Adel, Wisconsin, left Klemme early Sunday morning for Alamagordo, New Mexico, for a visit with Dr Dulmes' sister, Dr and Mrs. E. P. Simms and family.

They expect to be gone about 2 weeks and their trip will include a visit to the Texas Centennial Celebration at Dallas Texas.

Visited Texas Centennial

Patrolman Clair West, accompanied by another member of the force, spent their vacation last week taking in the Texas Centennial Exposition at Dallas Mr West spent the forepart of the week in Klemme and returned to his patrol duty this Wednesday morning. He brought back a 98 pound watermelon and some corn from Louisiana. The corn is on display at the Kluckhohn store

BELMOND LEGION DAY THURSDAY, AUGUST 6TH

Belmond —The annual Belmond Legion Day celebration will be held Aug. 6. The program will open Wednesday night with a concert by the high school band under the direction of Harry Keller. The Humboldt band will also present a concert on Thursday and two drum and bugle corps from Mason City will also appear. The regular parade of floats and a kiddies parade will be held. An athletic contest and other feature attractions will round out the program, closing with a dance in the evening In the afternoon a baseball game will be staged between the Forest City Collegians and the Algona Grays.

Observe the Stop signs. It's good sportsmanship and shows good sense. That sign wasn't made for others. It was made for you.

MANY SERIOUS FIRES ARE SET BY CARELESS SMOKERS

Fires Every Day Along Highways Endanger Fields And Buildings

On account of the dry grass and weeds along Iowa highways, the smoker should be very careful about tossing out lighted matches and cigarette stubs. Every day fires start along the highways and often spread to fields and farm buildings before they can be checked.

Motorists! Use caution! Be sure sure the match you toss away is out; break the match to be sure. Be certain your cigarette is out when you toss it away.

Do your part in preventing unnecessary fires along Iowa's high ways.

KLEMME FOOD MARKET HAS PARKING GROUND

Thursday C A. Larsen purchased the vacant lot east of his Klemme Food Market from Henry Suckow. This lot is the old site of the Idle Hour Theatre building which Mr. Suckow wrecked and sold sometime ago

Larsen had the lot cleaned up and filled in and will use it for a parking lot for the convenience of his customers.

The new arrangement also enables patrons of the store to drive right up to the rear of the store by using the driveway from the alley.

The drive and parking lot is a good improvement.

GOODELL SCHOOL EQUIPMENT GOT BACK BY SHERIFF

Officials Visited Circus At Union And Discover Missing Things

Goodell —Supt. Russell Fish of the Goodell schols was not surprised when he visited a circus at Union, Iowa, and saw the circus employees going about their tasks wearing sweat shirts, bright athletic socks and shoes, for he recognized them as the athletic equipment that had been stolen from the Goodell high school.

Discovery of the theft was made Monday when Superintendent Fish came from Eddyville to make preparations for the opening of the school which had been closed since spring When the theft occurred was not known, but it was recalled that a small circus had played in the school lot July 22.

Sheriff E. P. Hanson, of Garner, was called and Thursday he and the superintendent went to Union where the circus was playing. They noticed many of the employees wearing sweat shirts, socks and athletic shoes. They contacted the mayor, constable and justice of the peace at Union to conduct an investigation

At first the manager of the circus denied that anything had been taken but later he agreed to return the equipment provided no charges were preferred.

So all the equipment, including stop watch, sweat shirts, sox, caps, balls, bats, pencil and paper that were taken, valued at about $100, was returned. Some valuable papers in the school were not touched.

ICE CREAM SOCIAL

The Epworth League of the Klemme-Liberty Methodist church will serve home made ice cream and cake on Saturday evening of this week in the lot east of Wellemeyers store. The public is invited to patronize the young people.

FLOYD GIBBONS ADVENTURERS' CLUB

Hello Everybody

"Thunder in the Air"

By FLOYD GIBBONS

STEP up and meet William Dill of Newark, N. J. Bill's got a yarn to tell us today, and if it doesn't make him a Double Distinguished Adventurer with an order of blood and thunder on the side, then I'll be a Chinaman and so will my brother Ed.

It was during the early days of the World war—the fall of 1916, to be exact—and Bill Dill was working in a place where trouble was in the air and danger perched on his shoulder every minute of the day.

He was a foreman in a munitions plant located in the Bush Terminal building in Brooklyn, and in those days, mysterious accidents were happening in munitions plants all over the country.

The big "Black Tom explosion had occurred in July of that same year, and people said that German spies and agents had been responsible for it. The United States was expected to take a hand in the war any minute Germans were being watched closely by government detectives Munitions Factory Does a Shimmy.

German boats were being confiscated and all factories turning out war material for the Allies were swarming with guards watching for evidence of dirty work at the crossroads. But just the same, "accidents" and mysterious explosions were happening all over the country. No one knew where trouble was going to strike next.

It was almost nine o'clock on a chill September evening. The plant was working 24 hours a day, and the men were coming back to work after the supper hour. Bill Dill was in the glass-enclosed office, checking over reports. Everything seemed to be going nicely, when suddenly the floor gave a lurch, a terrific roar filled the air, and glass began flying from every direction.

The first thought Bill had was one of surprise to find that he was still sitting in his chair. He was cut in half a dozen places about the face and arms by bits of flying glass, but otherwise he seemed to be unhurt. He looked out over the floor of the plant. For a second or two everyone stood still. Then, all at once, they began a mad screaming rush for the exits.

Bill dashed out of the office, shouting to the men to stay where they were At the door stood a guard, his arms outstretched, trying to still the fears of the panic-stricken workers. The men stopped for a second, and Bill thought they had calmed down. But at the crucial moment, a new menace threw them into a second frenzy of fear. Smoke! A heavy black pall of it was issuing from the direction of the sand blast room.

There Was Sabotage in the Sand Blast Room.

Nothing could stop those frightened men then. They stampeded for the doors Bill was knocked over on a tray full of shrapnel shells. A guard tripped over a fellow carrying two pails full of oil, and both of them went down while oil ran all over them and over the floor. Bill scrambled to his feet and ran toward the sand blast room. He had a pretty good idea of what had happened. There were two giant compressors in there that stored air in great tanks five feet wide and eight feet high. Someone had been tampering with those compressors, and one of the tanks exploded.

Bill had gone about three steps in the direction of the sand blast room when suddenly, the lights went out. At the same time, several lesser explosions rocked the building and a dull red glare lit up the great room as great tongues of flame licked out across the floor. At the first flash of light Bill stumbled through the door to the sand blast room and saw the body of the blast operator stretched out on the floor.

But Bill didn't stop to pick up the blast operator. Suddenly he was feeling weak, and he knew that big explosion had hurt him more than he first suspected. While he still had his strength, he had to shut off the compressors which were still pumping air into the second, still unexploded tank.

How Bill Saved the Day for Bush Terminal.

The smoke was so thick that Bill was gasping to get his breath. The acrid fumes, drawn deep into his lungs, seared and burned them His eyes smarted His knees buckled beneath him. Flames were shooting up all around him He had just about enough strength to reach the power switch and turn off the compressors. How he was going to get out of that flame-swept room he didn't know. He wasn't even thinking of that First of all, the compressors had to be turned off.

Bill got to the switch and snapped it off. Then, suffocated and exhausted, he sank in a heap on the floor while tongues of flame lapped around him, coming closer and closer with every second. A black curtain descended over his eyes. Bill fainted.

He came to to find someone bending over him, holding a bottle of smelling salts to his nose He asked about the sand blast operator and was told that he'd been taken to a hospital. In the sand blast room, the company's firemen were getting the blaze under control. All was well in Bush Terminal. But the "accident" was not without its effect. "We discovered," says Bill, "that the explosion had been caused by someone who tampered with the by-pass safety valves, and the next night more than half my force refused to return to work. Fear and panic had done their jobs only too well."

Selling Wives Is Common Custom in Central Asia

Official attempts have failed to suppress wife bartering among the tribes inhabiting the Turkestan plateau in Central Asia Here, true to immemorial custom, shrewd merchants haggle over the prices of women herded together in the village market or bazaar like sheep or camels. Frequently, reveals a writer in London Tit-Bits magazine, young girls are kidnaped from their mountain homes and forced into marriage, their own parents sometimes being at the back of these revolting transactions. With the wealthier tribesmen all keeping big harems. the Asiatic marriage markets are always busy.

About a century ago, sales of wives were publicly tolerated in England. In March, 1802, at the market cross, Chapel-en-le-Frith, a laborer, though bidding opened briskly, could get no more than 11s. for his wife, a child, and a few oddments of furniture That same year a butcher's wife, put up for sale at Hereford, fetched £11 4s. and a bowl of punch. Some husbands even negotiated their wives on leasehold terms. Strapping provincial lasses, caught by London wife traders, were generally disposed of at Smithfield, their average price being 15s.

Lakes Filled With Dust

American lakes have been known to develop mats of vegetable matter so deep and strong and so covered with wind-blown dust that they appeared to be solid ground. In one case, notes a writer in Collier's Weekly, a railroad line was constructed over such a surface and the mistake was not discovered until the first train ran over the track—and sank out of sight.

Body Cells Drink as Well as Eat, Movie Films Show

Have Special Apparatus for Trapping Fluids

BALTIMORE.—Moving pictures of life under the microscope show that certain cells of the body drink as well as eat, using a ruffle for their drinking.

This discovery was made by Dr. Warren H. Lewis, of the department of embryology of the Carnegie Institution of Washington and the Johns Hopkins Medical school

For this bibulous type of cell activity he has used the word. pinocytosis meaning "drinking by cells." Since seeing it in studying moving pictures of cell life. Doctor Lewis has been able to observe it directly by watching the cells through the microscope without the aid of the camera.

Cells Look Like Ruffles.

The outer edge of these drinking cells flattens out into a thin membrane which looks like a ruffle. In the films it is seen to be constantly waving about, often projecting out for some distance from the body of the cell. Globules of fluid in the medium in which the cells live can be seen floating into a fold of the ruffled edge of the cell and being surrounded by part of the ruffle.

Trapped within its folds, which probably fuse around the globules and completely enclose them, they move rapidly on into the interior of the cell and within from one to five minutes may be seen with other globules that surround the cell nucleus.

Cells Drink Heavily.

Some of these cells are pretty heavy drinkers, it appears, for Dr Lewis reports that under certain conditions they take in a relatively enormous amount of fluid In the course of an hour the total may amount to one-third of the volume of the cell. As though a human toper were to down six or eight gallons in the same length of time.

It is not only the macrophages which are drinking cells. Dr. Lewis has seen cancer cells drinking and also has observed it in cells from part of the stomach tissue of rats. It may be that all cells drink.

Inventor's Device Tunes Ship's Radio Despite Heavy Seas

WASHINGTON.—An ingenious circuit intended to eliminate the detuning of a ship's radio transmitter and receiver produced by rolling seas, and thereby help insure the ship keeping in constant touch with other ships, is revealed in a patent granted here to a Paris, France, inventor — Jean Rebotier.

When a ship rolls at sea its radio antenna tilts toward and away from the water.

How Signals Are Lost.

This causes a change in antenna capacity, which means that the receiver may be thrown out of tune, and the transmitter out of control so that the radio signals received or sent out vary in intensity or may be lost altogether.

To compensate for this, the inventor connects the antenna with a variable tuning element, an adjustable condenser, which is worked automatically by the rolling motion of the ship.

No matter what position the ship is in its antenna capacity remains constant. Signals sent and received, therefore, cannot vary with rolling.

"Lost" Earthquake Is Located in Himalayas

WASHINGTON.—The "lost earthquake" has been found, hiding in the Himalayas

This mysterious earthquake, somewhere in northern India, registered itself strongly on seismographs all over the world on May 27. Since then, scientists have been hunting hard for it, very much puzzled that no word had come out by wire or radio, because first calculations indicated its occurrence in the densely populated valley of the Ganges, where great loss of life would have been certain

Now, from belated additional cables and radiograms that straggled in, seismologists of the U S. Coast and Geodetic Survey here, and of the Jesuit Seismological association in St Louis, have re-located it, this time in the remote, sparsely populated mountain fastnesses about 200 miles northwest of Mount Everest.

Mushroom Picking Dangerous Unless Species Are Known

Old-Fashioned Tests Are Held of No Value

EVERY warm summer rain is sure to be followed by a sudden crop of mushrooms. In woods and fields, in your front yard and around old stumps, they spring up overnight like—well, like mushrooms. Wild mushrooms are tempting—they have a tang and flavor sadly lacking in "store" mushrooms.

But are they safe? Fear of being poisoned by "toadstools" is the cause of many a fine mess of mushrooms going to waste.

There is no answer to that, except to know your mushrooms species by species. All the old-fashioned tests are superstitions, and valueless. The silver-spoon trick, for example, tells nothing The deadliest of poisonous mushrooms leaves the silver unblackened.

Old Notions Baseless.

Some of the old notions are completely opposite to fact, like the one that the kinds with black gills underneath are poisonous.

The common mushroom of the marketplace is black-gilled, and so are many of the best wild species. And the Amanitas, or death-cup mushrooms, always stay innocently white underneath.

Amanitas Are Deadly.

The Amanitas are one group of mushrooms that it is best to avoid completely, for while one or two of the species in this genus are good to eat, most of them are severely poisonous, and even deadly.

You can tell an Amanita by these marks: white gills, a ring or "veil" loose around the stalk, a half-buried cup holding the bottom of the stalk, and (sometimes) loose flakes of whitish stuff on top, that can be brushed off.

Safe Species Cited.

Good, safe species include the common meadow mushroom that is sold in the markets, the morel, which looks like a cone-shaped bit of honeycombed wax set on a stalk, and the big puffballs while they are still white and cheesy inside, and before they develop dark spots with the ripening of their spores

Incidentally, there is no distinction between mushroom and toadstool The names are synonyms, and refer to the shape of the fungus rather than to edibility or poisonousness Any fleshy fungus with a white head or cap set on a stalk is a mushroom.

Shield of Spartan Warrior Believed Found Near Athens

PRINCETON, N. J.—A decorated shield discovered by American excavators in the depths of a well near Athens is believed to be the famous shield of Spartan warrior Brasidas

That the shield is actually the special trophy of the Battle of Pylos, 424 B C., which the Athenians captured triumphantly from General Brasidas when he fell wounded, is the belief of Dr. Edward Capps, director of the American School of Classical Studies

So fragile and important is the Spartan shield it will be kept in a chemical solution a year before being permanently displayed.

Believed Authentic.

The inscription links the shield definitely with the battle, he explained, and the fine quality of the shield, and care taken to hide it in the well, suggest its importance Dr. Capps, who has just returned from Athens where the sixth year of excavation is being completed in the Athenian market place under leadership of Dr. T. Leslie Shear, said that another outstanding discovery of the season also was found in a well. This is an ivory statuette of a woman, about 18 inches high.

Digging has revealed numerous workings of Athenian democracy. Marble machines, resembling modern candy vending devices, have been found, and were probably used in allotting citizens to serve in administrative and judicial capacities. Balls, shuffled, were presumably dropped into a tube and drawn out at the bottom as needed.

Seek Oldest Americans at Continent's Doorstep

WASHINGTON.—A hunt for the most ancient human beings in America will be conducted this summer by an expedition to the northwestern doorstep of the continent, where the first immigrants presumably entered

Led by Henry B Collins, Jr., of the Smithsonian institution, the expedition sponsored jointly by the National Geographic society and the Smithsonian, is en route to the westernmost point of North America, Cape Prince of Wales, Alaska. This is the most likely place where ancient men would have crossed from Asia.

THIS WEEK

Paris: Of Many Newspapers
Surprise for Karl Marx
Mr. Eden Was Tired Out
A Big Somersault

This world is really no bigger, now, than the palm of your hand; wherever you are, news comes pouring in — a Pullman car on the Mohave desert has the "Examiner"; flying across, the Levand brothers hurry to the airfield at Wichita with the latest "Beacon"; and on the ocean, a newspaper appears every day; the radio feeds it; in Paris, ten times as many newspapers as are published in New York tell you anything you choose to believe, from editorials written by men who do not know that the royal and imperial French families died and were buried after the war of 1870 to fiery-eyed moderns who think they can graft Karl Marx and Lenin on Jacques Bonhomme, the French peasant, and produce a French Utopia, with a Russian accent and a pair of high boots.

Arthur Brisbane

They do not know Jacques Bonhomme, who bought his land in the revolution at bargain prices with inflated assignats, and means to keep it, nor do they know the small-sized French bourgeois, who thinks more of one four-cent franc than some of our governing geniuses think of a billion 59-cent dollars.

The Marx-Stalin-Lenin brotherhood in America, by the way, does not understand the inside feelings of the U. S. A. citizen, with his bungalow, automobile, radio set, washing machine and furniture, all "nearly paid for."

Send HIM, instead of a bill for his last installment, the statement, "No more private property," and see what he says and does.

You take your choice of dozens of Paris daily newspapers; the wild kind, that say anything and lose money; the tame kind, that say nothing and make money, but very little of it; the mummified kind, that still take "Madame La Marquise" seriously, and think themselves back in the days of old Madame De Deffand and Lord Bolingbroke.

You have, also, newspapers from all the Lilliput countries nearby—English, Italian, German—and the news is in them, only you must know how to extract it. They are queer little newspapers, and if that be provincialism, make the most of it.

In London, for instance, Lord Rothermere's newspaper tells you that Mr. Eden, British foreign secretary, has gone to "a secret destination" in the country for a week's rest.

English statesmen always go to "a secret destination," for reasons unknown to Mr. James Farley, who relaxes at the ringside, or President Roosevelt, who rests fishing, on a battleship, with fifty reporters on another ship, nearby.

You wonder that a man as young as Eden should need a rest. Gladstone, at nearly twice his age, was talking in the Commons at four in the morning—but Gladstones are few, Tim Healys also.

Rothermere's writer thinks Eden is all tired out after his Geneva speech, telling just why England lifted the Italian sanctions. It was he who made a speech recently, just as earnest and much louder, telling why those sanctions must NEVER be lifted. That was turning a big somersault. The English know how to do that, and you are supposed not to laugh.

Eden told Baldwin what the doctor said, and Baldwin said, "By all means, my boy, hurry off to a secret destination," and Eden hurried. In America, the businessman would say, "Doctor, there are a few things that I must settle first," meaning, perhaps, his income tax. He would hang on and on, and finally go to a really secret destination, in the graveyard.

Driving through Normandy, from Havre, where the ships land, would interest American farmers, especially any whose lands are "worn out" after comparatively few years of cultivation. On lands in this part of the world, wheat has been grown for three hundred years, and today yields better, bigger crops than ever.

In Rome, as in other places on the earth's surface, one city is piled upon another. Dig down through one and the other appears. Invasions, plagues, famines and the grinding ice have wiped them out.

Those that read this today are the descendants of men such as the inhabitants of the Stone age village. And still we are worried, looking down at the enemy, poverty, that may climb up and attack us in old age.

now have had acceptance es by both Mr. Roosevelt and Governor Landon, his opponent. To the extent that the keynote es of the national con-s indicate the trend of mind party workers and to the ex-at the acoeptance speeches a way the deeply root-s of the candidates, the is-the campaign are drawn. urse, it has frequently been the case that the issues of July are not the issues that decide the election in November. There are those students of politics who are saying this year that the questions discussed by President Roosevelt and Governor Landon in their acceptance speeches are going to have very little to do with the decision of the voters three months hence.

Campaign Issues

I can report only on a consensus among political authorities on this point. That consensus seems to be that Mr. Landon is going to stick to discussion of the major problems as he sees them and that Mr. Roosevelt's strategy will be governed entirely by whatever changes take place in campaign conditions.

In other words, these writers in Washington who have gone through many a harried political battle, seem to feel that Mr. Roosevelt's campaign strategy is going to be exactly like the policies he has followed in his present administration. By that I mean, to quote the President's own words, that "If one thing fails, we will try something else."

There is the conviction among these same writers that Governor Landon will resort to no oratorical flourishes nor will he employ any of the tactics that Mr. Roosevelt has so often used in his fireside radio chats. Further, it is quite evident, I believe, that Governor Landon will make the burden of his plea to the American people an appeal to restore what he considers to be the American form of government. It was quite obvious from his acceptance speech, as it has been evident in some of his pre-campaign pronouncements, that he favors the common sense idea in government management and that he will permit nothing to swerve him from that course.

But it should be said, it seems to me, that if Governor Landon is able to maintain that plane throughout his campaign, he will be deserving of great commendation. There are many observers here who believe he has undertaken a task of the most difficult kind The governor has built up or others have built up around him an atmosphere of simplicity. It has reached a high pitch. The question is—can he keep the campaign attuned to that pitch from now until November? If he does, he will surprise a great many observers.

Lately, I have heard through underground channels that Democratic Chairman Farley is getting a little irked at the methods employed by the youthful John Hamilton, who is chairman of the Republicans. "Big Jim" has taken a leave of absence as postmaster general, you will remember, in order to devote his time to re-electing President Roosevelt. He is now in a position to battle and, judging by his record, he can be expected to carry on a vigorous fight. That makes it all the more surprising to know that "Big Jim" has grown a little bit peevish as a result of the nudging and the razing that the red-headed Republican chairman has been handing him.

Farley Irked

Six weeks elapsed between the nomination of Governor Landon and the date of his formal notification. During this time, Mr Hamilton alone had to carry the Republican ball. He made numerous speeches and minced no words in any of them. He struck out straight from the shoulder at Mr. Farley.

During that time, Mr Hamilton really had no one firing back at him. It was exactly the same condition as obtained before the Republicans had selected a candidate and Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Farley had no one to fight back at them. The test for Mr Hamilton, therefore will come when Mr Farley gets into action and the Democratic campaign is fully under way. He is young in national politics and some of the success of the Republican campaign is going to depend upon how Mr. Hamilton conducts himself, when Mr. Farley starts jibing and knocking down the Republican chairman's ears in the heat of battle.

There is another phase of the campaign that is going to be interesting to watch. For three years, Mr. Roosevelt has had open channels on the radio, has had the utmost freedom in picking his spots for delivering new pronouncements or his appeals for patience by the people. But that time has passed insofar as the President is concerned. He is now confronted with competition. What I am trying to say is that everywhere and every time the President speaks, he will speak with the knowledge that a fighting opposition is ready to leap on every word and every proposal that he makes. This is an entirely different circumstance than any Mr. Roosevelt has faced since he entered the White House March 4, 1933.

ROTATING RUNS IS BEST FOR TURKEYS

Limited Summer Range, More Green Feed.

By E. M Funk of the Missouri College of Agriculture.—WNU Service

The summer range for turkeys should be limited in area, with temporary fences used in rotating the runs. An acre of good alfalfa or clover will be a sufficient area on which to raise 100 to 125 10-weeks-old turkeys to market age.

It is advisable to divide this one acre into four sections of approximately the same size, and rotate the runs, using each about two weeks before moving the temporary fence to another section. By rotating the runs every two weeks, more green feed will be provided, and this is regarded as a more sanitary practice A five or six-foot fence is usually high enough to keep the turkeys confined, especially when they are provided with plenty of feed. Should they give too much trouble in flying, their primary wing feathers can be clipped

Unless natural shade is available, artificial shade should be provided during the summer and early fall months. Protection from the sun may be provided by an arbor of straw or brush. During hot weather, a large consumption of feed can be secured if water containers and both grain and mash hoppers are kept in the shade.

Throughout the feeding period of both young and old stock, every sanitary precaution should be taken against disease and parasites.

Offer High Quality Eggs on the Roadside Market

Poultrymen who sell eggs at roadside markets should offer only the highest quality product, says J. C. Taylor, associate extension poultryman at the New Jersey College of Agriculture, Rutgers university.

Roadside stand patrons will pay fair prices for good quality, Taylor reminds poultrymen, and many producers have built up a year-round market through a reputation for being reliable.

His suggestions to poultrymen operating roadside markets follow:

Sell only infertile eggs. This means that no male birds should be with the laying flock.

Collect eggs twice a day and store them in a cool, clean cellar away from strong odors. Exposing eggs to extreme fluctuations of temperature causes rapid evaporation of their contents.

Sell all eggs in cartons—not in paper bags. The carton provides a means of advertising, reduces breakage, and makes handling easier

Machine to Aid Poultrymen

Five thousand laying hens can be cared for by one person if they are housed in a new hen battery equipped with an electric cleaning device The apparatus plugs into the nearest socket and the motor operates a small shovel scraper over the pans beneath the cages. In four minutes of use, the pan is scraped clean and the cleaner empties into containers at the end of each row of cages. Removing and emptying these containers is the only manual labor involved. Attached to each cage is a box large enough to contain food for several days. The bottom of the cage has an incline down which the egg rolls into a receiving cup.—Popular Mechanics Magazine.

On an average, about 40 per cent of the hens stop laying before September 1. If the culls are removed during this period rather than after October 1, about one and one-half tons of feed will be saved on a flock of 1,000 birds.

Size of the egg depends on the hen's breeding; size runs in the blood.

Chicks that are confined are more likely to develop cannibalism than those that run out-of-doors early in life.

A good tree-spray oil can also be used to spray chicken houses. H. H. Alp, extension poultryman, College of Agriculture, University of Illinois, says the oil spray penetrates better than most sprays.

Clean Premises, Get Rid of Flies

Eliminate Breeding Places, First Step in Driving Away Pest.

By JOHN A AREY, Extension Specialist, North Carolina State College.—WNU Service

One female fly allowed to live and breed may leave millions of descendents by fall. Don't give them a chance to breed.

Flies are not only carriers of filth and disease, but they are a constant source of annoyance to cattle and livestock Cows will not give as much milk if continually harassed by flies.

The first step in getting rid of this nuisance is to eliminate breeding places Manure from stables should be removed daily, if possible.

When practical, it is best to haul the manure direct to the fields where it can be spread over the land. Where this is impractical, at least try not to leave large piles of manure lying around for many days at a time.

Clean up the premises of the house and barnyard. Any filth left exposed will serve as a breeding place for flies.

With the best of care, however, it will be impossible to destroy all flies in the larvae stage Therefore, it is advisable to use traps, poisons and sprays in fighting this pest.

A good poison can be made by mixing three quarts of skim milk with one-fourth quart of formaldehyde and one-fourth quart of molasses Place the mixture in shallow containers where the flies are, but where animals and poultry cannot get at it.

A good spray is very effective. Follow the directions given, and good results will be obtained.

Horses Riding in Truck Should Face the Right

When horses are loaded crosswise into an open motortruck they are safer if their heads are toward the outside of the road Reports to the United States Department of Agriculture tell of horses seriously injured by passing traffic —often another truck—when they are loaded with heads toward the center of the road. The danger is greatest at night.

A common practice when hauling horses in open trucks is to load them half and half, that is, crosswise with every other head toward the center of the road The length of the average horse from tail to breast is about the same as the width of the average live stock truck Although horses are loaded conveniently and compactly in this fashion, with the head and neck extended over the side of the truck, it is safer to load them so that all face the outside of the road

In any event, says the bureau of animal industry, horses in a motor truck should have good footing and be so secured that they are not upset by sudden stops and starts

Teeth of Horse

The canine, or as they are commonly called the "bridle teeth," of a horse come in and are in wear at five years of age. However, according to the Rural New Yorker, mares do not normally have such teeth; they occur commonly or normally only in the gelding and stallion. When mares have such teeth they are usually non-breeders; many call such sterile mares "wolf-teeth mares" The appearance of such teeth in the mare is a symptom rather than a cause of such sterility.

Weeds Here to Stay

Weeds, says a Northwestern university botanist, are here to stay. Prof. Oliver Duggins, after a study of 100 common American weed types, reached these conclusions: Deep roots enable weeds to survive cold winters; they can grow in a wide range of soils; they have long flowering periods and efficient methods of distributing seeds; they drive out neighboring plants, and they are indifferent to climatic conditions.

Fattening Beef Calves

Beef calves may be permitted to run with their dams through the summer and be fed liberally on grains by means of a "creep" and be ready for market at nine months of age, weighing from 500 to 700 pounds. January or February calves may be fat enough to market directly off the cows by fall. Calves born in early spring and when pasture conditions are not favorable, may require full feeding in a dry lot for a couple of months before they are marketed.

Rotation in Pastures

Pasture experiments in Great Britain during the last few years indicate that better results can be secured from a rotation in pastures, and that while there are some lands which are continuously in grass, writes an agriculturist in the Montreal Herald, yet in many cases the laying down of land to permanent pasture is not regarded as good a system of farming as establishing a rotation of crops including grass

Captivating Daytime Frock

Patter.. No. 1916-B

This clever dress features a flattering yoke which dips to a point in front and is equipped with twin slashes a few inches below the neckline to accommodate a ribbon bow of any color you wish to use. Most women like several different ones to which they match their accessories. Radiating tucks at the yoke and waist contribute a smooth fit and flattering effect, while center seams in front and back terminate in two kick pleats for reserved fullness where it will do the most good. The pointed pockets with shaped turned over flaps are novel. You'll want to make more than one dress, because the pattern is so easy to follow and the fabrics so numerous to choose from. How about seersucker, novelty cotton, linen, crash or silk.

Barbara Bell Pattern No. 1916-B is available for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3 1-2 yards of 39 inch material. Send 15 cents in coins.

Send for the Summer Pattern Book containing 100 Barbara Bell well-planned, easy-to-make patterns. Exclusive fashions for children, young women, and matrons. Send 15 cents for your copy.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., 367 W. Adams St., Chicago, Ill.

All Around the House

To remove the onion odor from the hands after peeling and slicing them rub the hands with vinegar or lemon juice before washing with soap and water. If the onions are sliced under water and the hands are already wet rub them with dry salt.

If in breaking eggs into a mixing bowl a bad one should accidentally be dropped in, a whole cake may be spoiled. It is, therefore, wise to always break one egg at a time into a cup before putting it into the mixing bowl.

Drain all boiled vegetables as soon as tender. They become soggy if they are allowed to stand unstrained after cooking. The water drained off may be saved for soup stock.

When the cork breaks in a bottle pour out the liquid it contains and put enough ammonia in the bottle to float the cork. Set away until the cork crumbles.

THE PARDONING BOARD

In Texas an amendment to the state constitution is proposed which would relieve the governor from the responsibility of passing on applications for pardon and parole The pardoning power would be vested in a state board, which would take that responsibility

The granting or refusing of pardons and commutations of punishmenet imposes a distressing burden on a governor and it is an ordeal he should not be required to endure

An enormous amount of time and study is often involved in looking into these cases A governor should never have to decide whether a person convicted of some major crime should die in the cahir or should get a reprieve

A board of competent men will not feel the same nervous strain and rasping responsibility that a governor must suffer when the fate of the unfortunate is placed entirely in his hands

It would be good public policy to relieve the governor of such harrowing experiences and influences in dealing with these important matters.

Freight trains nowadays act like express specials. New freight schedules are so fast, I sometimes wonder if everything has to be delivered day before yesterday.

Many of our passenger trains are running faster schedules, too. Well, one thing is sure. We make faster runs, but the first railroad commandment is still "Safety First." That's one rule they won't change.

Western railroads and allied industries provided jobs for 750,000 workers last year. Some of them live in our town. Good neighbors.

Passenger fares are now the lowest in history with substantial reductions on round trips. And no more surcharge for riding in sleeping cars.

This new Free pick-up-and-delivery of less than carload freight—I heard some traveling salesmen talking about it on the train yesterday. They said it saves shippers a lot of money and centers all responsibility on the railroad. The railroad picks up the freight at shipper's door and delivers to receiver's door. Of course, local delivery men get the haul from door-to-car and car-to-door at both ends. The railroad handles the whole transaction.

When railroads are busy, I notice towns along the railroad are prosperous. The merchants put more ads in the newspapers.

We are proud of railroad achievements, appreciate the public's good will and increased patronage, and pledge continued progress.

GUTTENBERG MUNICIPAL PLANT VENTURE FAILS

Guttenberg Voters in Guttenberg will go to the polls Thursday, August 20. in a special election called by the city council to vote on disposition of the municipal light plant built two years ago.

Finding that the plant has failed to make sufficient money to pay for itself, the council has entered into negotiations with the Central States Power and Light Corporation. It asks the company to buy the plant and to sell electricity to the town.

Bonds amounting to almost $70,000 at 6 percent interest were issued to finance the construction of the plant in 1934 They contsituted a lien against the earnings.

The first $3 000 of bonds with interest were paid but since September 1, 1935 bonds and interest have been defaulted By September 1 of this year there will be $10,000 in bonds and more than $6.000 in interest in arrears

RAIN OR NO RAIN, PLANT YOUR FALL GARDEN NOW

Rain or no rain, plant the fall garden now! Second plantings of vegetables, including turnips, carrots, beets string beans, celery cabbage and chard, should be planted immediately so that they will be in the ground ready to grow as soon as rain comes.

Seeds for the late garden should be sown on a well prepared, firm seedbed and should be planted deeper than in the spring Ground should be rolled or packed well following seeding and then left alone until rain sprouts the seed. Do not water to sprout the seed

Later in August, winter radishes and onions can be planted Winter onions are best grown from the small multiplier onion sets.

BEER AND GAS TAX COLLECTIONS FOR JULY EXCEED 1935

Des Moines—Beer and gasoline tax collections advanced in July as compared with the same month last year, the state treasurer's office reported Friday

Beer tax collections increased about 35 per cent, the $126,441 revenue from beer taxes and permits being a gain of $33.013.

Gasoline tax income totaled $1,345,110, a gain of $252,963

Inheritance tax collections totaled $76.898, a decline of $47,914 for the same month last year.

EINGINEERS RECLAIM CHEMICALS FROM BEETS

Ames —The lowly corncob still retains its lead as a source of important industrial chemicals in the series of tests made here by Iowa State college engineers in their "cheap raw materials" search that includes current experiments with dried beet pulp.

Destructive distillation (heating in absence of air) of the dried beet pulp has produced such chemicls as methanol, acetic acid and acetone, but in smaller quantities than when corn cobs are used. The beets produced good gas yields, however.

The research is aimed at developing procedures whereby common rural products can be totally changed into something more valuable.

Spanish Government Is Checking the Rebellion

REPORTS from various sources when analyzed indicated that the Spanish government was more than holding its own in the desperate fighting with the Fascist rebels. It was sending men out to check the advance of General Mola's columns on Madrid from the north and bombing rebel strongholds in that part of the country, as well as Cordoba and Seville in the south and Ceuta and Melilla in Morocco. The loyalists won decided victories at Caspe in the Guadarrama mountains where the rebels were trying to break through to Madrid, and at Oviedo.

C. G. Bowers

Mola's officers explained that he was waiting for the arrival of General Franco's forces from the south, but those troops had not been able to get very far in their advance on the capital. Their chieftains, however, professed to be confident of ultimate victory.

Claude G. Bowers, American ambassador to Spain, was cut off from communication with the summer quarters of his embassy at San Sebastian for several days, being himself at his summer residence in Fuentarrabia, close to the French border. He finally got in touch with the embassy and removed the staff to his villa. Mr. Bowers also provided safe haven for a number of other foreign diplomats and their families. He said he had ascertained that not a single American had been injured in the civil war. American warships and liners were utilized to evacuate all the Americans in ports where their lives were in danger.

Nazi-Polish Quarrel in Danzig Is Ending

ACCORDING to announcement by a Polish news agency which is generally considered to be the mouthpiece of the Polish foreign office, an accord has been reached between Berlin and Warsaw on the policies to be followed in the Free City of Danzig. The Nazis are said to have agreed to give explanations that will take the sting out of recent incidents in the city. The texts of notes exchanged between Germany and Poland will be submitted to the League of Nations before being made public.

Vimy Ridge Memorial Unveiled by Edward

MORE than 100,000 persons stood in silence at Vimy, France, as King Edward VIII of England unveiled the magnificent memorial built by France to commemorate the heroic capture of Vimy Ridge by the Canadian forces in April, 1917. After greeting President Lebrun of France in French, the king said:

King Edward

"We raise this memorial to Canadian warriors. It is an inspired expression in stone chiseled by a skillful Canadian hand of Canada's salute to her fallen sons. It marks the scene of feats of arms which history will long remember and Canada can never forget. And the ground it covers is the gift of France to Canada."

The dedication culminated ten years of labor and an expenditure of about $1,000,000 on erection of the memorial. The work was completed after earlier delays in construction because of difficulties in finding the 7,000 to 8,000 tons of special stone required.

Walter S. Allward, Toronto architect and sculptor who designed the monument for the Canadian battlefields memorial commission, supervised the preparations for the unveiling.

Sir Henry Wellcome, Scientist, Dies

SIR HENRY WELLCOME, who was born in a log cabin in Wisconsin 83 years ago and who became one of England's greatest scientists and explorers, died in London following an operation. His scientific achievements ranged from the establishment of physiological laboratories to pioneering in the field of archaeological survey through the use of airplanes. He won the Royal Humane society life saving medal in 1885 and as late as 1927 founded the Lady Stanley Maternity hospital in Uganda, Central Africa.

Queen Mary Sets New Atlantic Record

THE Queen Mary, Cunard White Star line's great liner, set a new transatlantic record in her latest crossing to New York, taking the blue ribbon of the sea from the Normandie of the French line. Her time from Cherbourg breakwater to Ambrose lightship was four days, eight hours and thirty-seven minutes. This beat Normandie's record by three hours and five minutes, but Queen Mary's course was somewhat shorter than that taken by her rival, and the latter still holds the speed by hour record.

Flying out to greet the British liner, a big seaplane piloted by Capt. W. W. Wincapaw fell to the sea. The nine persons aboard were picked up by a boat from the liner Exermont, but one of them, E. T. Ramsdell, a Boston newspaper photographer, was fatally injured.

Repudiate Debts If Lemke Loses, Says Coughlin

FATHER CHARLES E. COUGHLIN, speaking at the home-coming celebration for William Lemke at Hankinson, N. D., advised his hearers to repudiate their debts if the Union party candidate were not elected President. "And if anybody tries to enforce them," he added, "repudiate them also." This, the priest declared, is the only way out.

Board Is Appointed to Study Drouth Remedies

SCATTERED rains over limited areas brought only temporary relief from the heat and drouth, and then warm weather started a new advance over the corn belt. The federal crop reporting board in Washington said the drouth was as severe as that of 1934 and worse than any since the western country was settled. The serious conditions prevailed over practically the entire area from the Rocky mountains in Montana to the Hudson valley in New York and southward over western Pennsylvania, central Maryland, the Ohio valley, parts of Arkansas, and most of Oklahoma.

M. L. Cooke

It was announced in Washington that President Roosevelt had created a national committee to study measures for remedying conditions in the drouth region through utilization of natural resources. The committee is headed by Morris L. Cooke, rural electrification administrator. Other members are Col. Richard C. Moore of the army engineers; John C. Page, acting commissioner of the bureau of reclamation; Frederick H. Fowler of the national resources committee; Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, and Harry L. Hopkins, works progress administrator.

Mr. Roosevelt intends to make a trip through the drouth area late in August.

Many Quitting the CCC to Take Private Jobs

DIRECTOR ROBERT FECHNER reports that nearly 13,000 members of the Civilian Conservation Corps left that organization during June to accept private employment, and he said this was largely attributable to the general improvement in business conditions, and in part to the practical education given the men.

The exact number discharged in June was 12,995, the largest group to quit since the corps was reduced to a maximum of 350,000.

Nominations for Senate Are Made in Iowa

IOWA Republicans nominated Barry Halden of Chariton, editor and American Legion leader, for the United States senate seat made vacant by the death of Louis Murphy. His Democratic opponent is Guy M. Gillette.

The state Farmer-Labor party delegates met in Des Moines and named former Senator Smith Wildman Brookhart as their candidate for the seat. Until recently he has been connected with the New Deal farm organization.

Ousting of Eleanor Holm From Olympic Team

PROBABLY the controversy over the ousting of Eleanor Holm from the American Olympic team is destined to be long lived; but it is difficult to see how the committee could have done otherwise in the circumstances. The backhand swimming champion, who is Mrs Jarrett in private life, refused to obey the training rules and indulged in several drinking parties on the ship that carried the athletes to Germany. She disregarded warnings, and afterward said the officials knew she liked "a good time, particularly champagne." Her defenders seem to think she was old enough and experienced enough to be permitted to do as she pleased, regardless of the effect on discipline.

Organized Labor Split Nears the Climax

IT SEEMS at this time that nothing can prevent the great schism in the ranks of American organized labor. John L Lewis, head of the United Mine Workers, and his followers in the industrial union movement, are determined to go ahead with their plans for the organization of steel workers into a mass union, and now have expanded their program, proposing to unionize thus the employees of steel fabrication and processing plants.

Moreover, Lewis and his associates have declared they will not appear before the executive council of the American Federation of Labor to stand trial on charges of "fomenting insurrection," so it appears the council can do nothing but suspend the rebels and their unions, these constituting about one third of the federation's membership. If this is done, the final decision as to expulsion of these unions will be made by the national convention in Tampa in November.

Gov. Landon Accepts the Republican Nomination

GOV. ALF. M. LANDON now knows officially that he is the Republican nominee for President of the United States. Before more than 100,000 of his fellow citizens he stood at the south entrance of the Kansas capitol in Topeka and received the formal notification from Congressman Snell of New York, who was permanent chairman of the Cleveland convention. Around him were grouped a thousand leaders of the party, and in front of him were the throngs of his supporters and admirers who had gathered from far and near to do him honor and to witness the ceremonies. Trains, automobiles, buses and airplanes had been pouring them into Topeka for several days and the gayly decorated little city was crowded to the limit. Everyone was happy and enthusiastic and everyone appeared confident that Landon would be elected.

Gov. Landon

The nominee's speech of acceptance was the plain spoken, outright kind of talk his hearers expected. Asking divine guidance to make him worthy of the faith and confidence shown in him, he said:

"This call, coming to one whose life has been that of the everyday American, is proof of the freedom of opportunity which belongs to the people under our government."

Here, briefly, is what Mr Landon had to say on some of the more vital issues:

Recovery — "The record shows that these (New Deal) measures did not fit together into any definite program of recovery. Many of them worked at cross-purposes and defeated themselves. The nation has not made the durable progress, either in reform or recovery, that we had the right to expect . . . We must be freed from incessant governmental intimidation and hostility. We must be freed from excessive expenditures and crippling taxation. We must be freed from the effects of an arbitrary and uncertain monetary policy, and from private monopolistic control."

Relief—"Let me emphasize that while we propose to follow a policy of economy in government expenditures, those who need relief will get it. We will not take our economies out of the allotments to the unemployed. We will take them out of the hides of the political exploiters."

Agriculture—"We shall establish effective soil conservation and erosion control policies in connection with a national land use and flood prevention program—and keep it all out of politics. Our farmers are entitled to all of the home market they can supply without injustice to the consumer. We propose a policy that protects them in this right . . . We propose to pay cash benefits in order to cushion our farm families against the disastrous effects of price fluctuations and to protect their standard of living."

Labor—"The right of labor to organize means to me the right of employees to join any type of union they prefer, whether it covers their plant, their craft or their industry. It means that, in the absence of a union contract, an employee has an equal right to join a union or to refuse to join a union."

Constitution—"It is not my belief that the Consitution is above change. The people have the right, by the means they have prescribed, to change their form of government to fit their wishes . . . But change must come by and through the people and not by usurpation. . . . The Republican party, however, does not believe that the people wish to abandon the American form of government."

State Rights — "There has now appeared in high places a new and dangerous impulse. This is the impulse to take away and lodge in the Chief Executive, without the people's consent, the powers which they have kept in their state governments or which they have reserved in themselves. In its ultimate effect upon the welfare of the whole people, this is the most important question now before us. Shall we continue to delegate more and more power to the Chief Executive or do we desire to preserve the American form of government?"

STAR DUST

Movie • Radio

By VIRGINIA VALE

THE death of Thomas Meighan may not mean very much to the younger movie-goers, but it will shock those who remember him as one of the big stars of the days of silent pictures. Like many stage stars, he was not too sure at first that he would like pictures.

But he did "The Miracle Man" and with it hit his stride. Oddly enough, Lon Chaney made his name in that picture too. And so did Betty Compson, who was finding it none too easy to climb the ladder of fame.

Nobody suspected that "The Miracle Man" would be such an epoch-making picture as it was. But it established its three leading actors as stars almost overnight.

And speaking of star-making pictures, see what's happened to the people who appeared in "The Private Life of Henry the Eighth," none of whom were well known in this country till it was released—and the rest of the world had acclaimed only Charles Laughton, of the cast.

Charles Laughton

But since then Laughton, Robert Donat, Merle Oberon, Wendy Barrie and Binnie Barnes have been welcomed by Hollywood. All have been extremely successful in American pictures.

Since her marriage Jean Parker has been luckier than many Hollywood brides; she has had assignments that provided a pleasant honeymoon. First they went to Texas, on location with the company that was making "The Texas Ranger"; now they're off to Mammoth lake and the mountains for "King of the Royal Mounted." Now all she needs is an engagement with some company that's headed for Honolulu, Hollywood's pet honeymoon spot.

Joe Penner is going to make that picture at last. And because children have become sure-fire hits on the screen, he'll be assisted by Patsy Lee Parsons, a five-year-old who sings and dances. The dancing teachers of this land ought to give Shirley Temple a medal or something. Everywhere—even out in the country where you wonder where and how they can take dancing lessons, you see little girls doing tap dancing nowadays. And Shirley is responsible for that!

Just one more story of the way things happen in Hollywood. Samuel Goldwyn wanted a German actress for a role in "Come and Get It." He was sure that none of the local talent measured up. So he had old German films run off for him, for days and days, in the hope of seeing exactly the right actress in one of them. If he found her, of course he'd have to find out where she was, and put her under contract, and have her brought to California at once.

He found the girl in a picture called "Frederika" and the wheels began to turn. Then it was discovered that she is Mady Christians, who has been right in Hollywood for two years, yearning to make a lot of pictures but not getting too many assignments.

Remember Joan Crawford in "Dancing Lady"? The picture is being re-issued, not because of Joan's popularity, but because Fred Astaire had a small part in it. Nelson Eddy had a bit, too—just a flash and he's gone. And now see what fame the gentlemen have attained on the screen! Fred Astaire has achieved an unprecedented popularity in the gay night club type of vehicle; Nelson Eddy has become the idol of millions of movie goers as well as radio listeners.

Joan Crawford

ODDS AND ENDS . . . Don't miss "The Moon's Our Home" if you want to see a very funny picture . . . Richard Arlen has just entered the Vancouver $5,000 golf tournament; he'd rather golf than eat . . . Joe E. Brown and his wife went to Peoria, Ill., for the opening of his picture, "Earthworm Tractors," Peoria being the world's tractor center . . . This last year in radio has proved that the public doesn't care any more for programs that depend on gags instead of funny situations . . . And the fact that Ed Wynn failed to regain his former popularity is one proof of it . . . Rubinoff (and his violin) turned down an offer to reappear with Eddie Cantor . . . Constance Bennett, Simone Simon, Loretta Young and Janet Gaynor will work together in "Ladies in Love"—and Hollywood looks for displays of temperament from at least three of them before the picture's finished.

Curiosa Americana

By Elmo Scott Watson

HE Didn't Say It

POPULAR belief ascribes to Horace Greeley, editor of the New York Tribune, the admonition "Go West young man, go West!" But Greeley didn't originate that phrase—he only helped popularize it.

The man who first wrote it (at least, in its application to the American frontier) was John L. B. Soule, editor of the Terre Haute (Ind.) Express. In 1851 Richard Thompson also wagered a barrel of flour that Soule could write an article that would be attributed to Greeley.

The result was a column editorial about the West's opportunities for young men in which Soule declared that Horace Greeley could never have given a young man better advice than contained in the words "Go West, young man, go West!" Although stated merely as Soule thought Greeley might have expressed it, newspapers all over the country began to credit Greeley with the epigram.

Finally Greeley reprinted Soule's editorial with a note stating that even though he endorsed the sentiment, he did not originate the "Go West" phrase. But people kept right on believing Greeley said it and they still do.

Similarly, they attribute to Charles A. Dana, famous editor of the New York Sun, the definition of news—"If a dog bites a man, that is not news, because it happens so often; but if a man bites a dog, that is news." The real author of that saying was not Dana—although he endorsed it, but John B. Bogart, city editor of the Sun from 1873 to 1890.

Joke on the Library

BOSTON, the "Athens of America," is proud of her public library as one of the symbols of her pre-eminence as a cultural center. On three sides of the building are names cut in blocks of granite—immortal names, selected after much deliberation from the pages of universal history. They were culled with care from all branches of human achievement and knowledge so that future generations might read them and be reminded of the accomplishments of the men who bore those names.

All of which was very fine until one day a newspaper reporter happened to read downward the names on one of the blocks. They were:

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Moses | Mozart | Wren |
| Cicero | Euclid | Herrick |
| Kalidasa | Aeschylus | Irving |
| Isocrates | Dante | Titian |
| Milton | Epictetus | Erasmus |

Then he wrote a story for this paper pointing out the fact that the initial letters of the names spelled out the name of McKim, Meade and White, the firm of New York architects which had designed the edifice. Great was the indignation of the board of trustees when they realized that some one had "put it over" on them. So they quickly had the names chiseled off and substituted a new plaque which wouldn't give the architects some free advertising with an acrostic from the names of the immortals.

A "Foreign" President

THE Constitution of the United States says that only a native-born citizen of the United States shall serve as President. Does that mean that if a President becomes a citizen of another country, he is automatically barred from office?

If it does, then Abraham Lincoln should have been deposed from the Presidency three weeks after he was inaugurated. For on March 29, 1861, the regent captains of the tiny European republic of San Marino officially made Lincoln a citizen of that republic. In the San Marino archives is a letter from the American President thanking his "great and good friends" for the honor and if this can be construed as an acceptance of it, then he became a citizen of San Marino.

But Lincoln wasn't the only "foreign President." Herbert Hoover was another. Under the laws of Switzerland, while he was President he was still a Swiss (and still is) and technically subject to military service in the European republic just because his ancestor, a man then going by the name of Huber, came to this country more than 100 years ago and didn't officially relinquish his citizenship in his native land.

NEW SOIL CONSERVATION RULING MADE

Word has been received by Ben V. Greiman, Chairman of the Hancock County Soil Conservation Committee, that small grains cut for for feed cannot be classified as hay if grain has formed before the cutting, and if small grains have been cut with a binder and bound into sheaves it would be evidence that grain had formed.

Producers who might have planned to comply by stacking and using for hay oats already cut, providing they had a good stand of some legume crop will not be eligible for soil conserving payment.

For further information producers should see members of county committees, their township committee or County Agent.

U. S. PREDICT 185 MILLION BUSHELS CORN FOR IOWA

Average For Iowa Corn Crop This Year Is Only 17 Bushels Per Acre

The U. S Government Crop report and estimate released Monday afternoon is of great interest to the Iowa Farmer.

The government prediction estimates Iowa will produce 185,300,000 bushels of corn, or an average yield of 17 bushels for the state. This is the lowest in 42 years The Illinois yield is estimated at 12 million bushels above Iowa.

The estimate for other states in percentage of normal gives Minnesota 47, South Dakota 18, Nebraska 19, Kansas 15, Missouri 20, Illinois 18 Wisconsin 53, Michigan 62, Indiana 46, Ohio 57 adn Iowa 37

Hancock county has a 50 percent normal corn crop, Kossuth 43, Winnebago 44, Wright 39 and Cerro Gordo 36 The highest counties are Cedar 70 percent, Clinton 67, Delaware and Jones each 64, and Ringgold the lowest at 11 per cent.

The figures are based on the ten year average.

Iowa's oats crop, however, was estimated at 30 bushels to the acre for a total of 171 million bushels. Iowa leads all states in this product.

SOME GOOD FIELDS OF CORN IN HANCOCK COUNTY

Although the drought has damaged corn in Hancock County, still there are many fairly good fields to be found.

The writer visited with Ben F. Greiman the other evening, and as Ben gets over the county every day we sought his opinion as to how the corn really was getting along Ben came right out and stated it was not nearly as bad as many would think, and to demonstrate his theory he led the writer into his own field Mr Greiman has perhaps a field above the average but we found the stand excellent, one to two well developed ears on every stalk, and the corn well leaved and healthy looking. Ben estimated it would go sixty bushels to the acre This is a field of hybrid corn and Mr Greiman thinks that perhaps that variety stands the dryness better than other kinds.

Saturday evening Mrs. William Ax brought in a half dozen fine roasting ears that she picked at random from their field. Every ear was well developed, the rows even and filled from tip to butt. She also brought in some samples of their potatoes which were good for this year.

Of course, we admit that there are many fields of corn that are not so good this year and that have been damaged. Good rains would help to produce good silage.

Bloody Civil War Rages in Spain

CIVIL war, desperate and bloody, broke out in Spain, and though the government in Madrid declared it was in control of the situation, such news as got through the censorship indicated that the struggle was by no means ended. On one side were the Fascists and royalists led by Gen. Francisco Franco; on the other were the loyal troops and the workers, Communists and Socialists. The rebels started the game in Spanish Morocco and the Canaries and were soon in control there. Then Franco, who is only forty-three years old but a dynamic character, crossed over to Algeciras, followed by the Foreign Legion and a lot of Moors, Moroccans and black African troops. After a sharp batttle at La Linea, close to Gibraltar, these contingents began a march northward toward Seville and Cadiz. There was severe fighting in San Sebastian, where the American embassy is located in summer, and in other border towns. Malaga was reported to be in flames.

L. Companys

Commanders of the rebels asserted their aim was to "save the republic," to keep order and to destroy the Marxists. In Barcelona their attack was directed especially against Luis Companys, president of the Catalonian parliament, who was said to be besieged in his offices.

Jose Maria Gil Robles, leader of the Catholic C. E. D. A. (Confederation of Autonomous Right Parties) fled to Biarritz, France. An aviator who escaped the rebels in Morocco declared Gil Robles had instigated the revolt.

Premier Santiago Casares Quiroga resigned in favor of Diego Martinez-Barrio, speaker of parliament, but the latter held the office only a few hours. Then Jose Giral, former minister of marine, formed a cabinet with General Pozas, who has the support of both the powerful Civil Guard and Republican elements of the army, as minister of war.

The rebels sent word to the government that unless it capitulated they would bomb Madrid from planes.

Olympic Torch Started to Berlin Games

IN OLYMPIA, Greece, scene of the first Olympic games, a torch was lighted by the rays of the sun and a Greek runner seized it and started it on a 12-day relay to the sports field in Berlin where the Olympic flame is to be lighted on August 1. Five thousand distinguished persons were selected to carry the torch, these including King Boris of Bulgaria, King Peter of Jugoslavia, and a long list of princes, statesmen and sportsmen. On the last leg it was to be borne by S. Loues of Greece, winner of the marathon in the games of 1896. A hundred thousand Hitler youths will accompany Loues in a triumphal parade to the stadium.

Five thousand torches to carry the flame were donated by the Krupp works, so each of the bearers will retain one as a souvenir.

Hot and Dry Spell Broken by Rains and Cool Winds

RELIEF for the drouth-stricken regions in the Middle West came with rains in many sections and cooling winds that sent the temperature down toward normal. However, it was too late to save the crops in many states, and prices of foodstuffs continued to advance. The farmers began to receive aid from the government in the form of cash, and no one could deny that they needed this help.

Dr. Tugwell

Loss of life throughout the United States from the unprecedented heat wave exceeded 3,850, an all-time high.

Agronomists in Minnesota, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois and Ohio expressed apprehension over the outlook for the corn crop unless general rains should develop rapidly.

Arriving at Bismarck, N. D., to help co-ordinate drouth relief enterprises, Rexford G. Tugwell, resettlement administrator, was informed that approximately 60,000 farm families in the state were among the needy. A conference of state and federal officials in Bismarck developed a three-fold plan for the relief of dwellers in the desolated areas of the Dakotas, western Minnesota, eastern Montana and Wyoming. These included:

Immediate advancement of money to needy families, repayable out of WPA earnings; granting of funds to farmers desiring to keep small livestock herds for the purchase of feed and subsistence to be repaid by work on WPA projects; loans and grants to owners of large scale cattle enterprises to cover the cost of shipping animals to other states for feeding.

Nazi Decrees in Danzig Crush Opposition

UNLESS the protests of Poland are effective, all opposition to Nazi power in the Free City of Danzig is due to be crushed. Dr. Arthur Karl Greiser, president of the Danzig senate, which is controlled by Nazis, has issued administrative decrees ordering:

1. Dissolution of any organization whose members, with knowledge of its executive board, spreads news "endangering the state interest."

2. Prohibition of review by the courts of police measures of a political nature, including those aimed at the right of assembly, the press, and free speech.

3. Prohibition of Jewish ritual slaughtering for food purposes.

4. Imposition of three month protective custody on persons declared to be "endangering the public peace."

Thus the city's constitution is virtually set aside, and the Poles especially, having extensive economic interests there, are indignant.

Doings of Towsendites in Their Convention

AN ALLIANCE between Dr. Francis E. Townsend, Father Charles E. Coughlin and Rev. Gerald L. K. Smith in the interests of a third party was announced at the Townsendite convention in Cleveland, attended by 12,000 followers of the California doctor who advocates pensions of $200 per month for every person over sixty.

Dr. Townsend

In an address before the convention, Father Coughlin bitterly denounced the present administration and President Roosevelt and called upon the delegates to follow Dr. Townsend in endorsing the candidacy of William Lemke for the presidency on the Union ticket.

Lemke himself appeared before the convention before it adjourned and made a speech in which he pledged himself to "stand four-square behind the old age pension movement" and denounced the present administration as "national lunacy." The delegates applauded the first statement, but otherwise were rather apathetic toward the Union party leader. Doctor Townsend made no plea for him but merely urged his followers to concentrate on the election of senators and congressmen.

Nanking Troops Take Control of Canton

REVOLT of the Cantonese against the Nanking government has collapsed and latest reports say government troops have entered Canton and taken over maintenance of peace and order. There was no opposition and the city was quiet.

Chen Chi-tang, the Canton war lord, deserted his followers and fled to Hongkong on a gunboat. There was a scramble to find Chen's alleged silver hoard, said to amount to many million dollars, but much of it is believed to be deposited in foreign banks.

The Nanking government gains possession of Kwantung province's fleet of more than 300 fighting planes, and also of extensive armaments. These latter include quantities of heavy artillery, field artillery and machine guns, nearly half a million rifles, numbers of anti-aircraft guns, tanks, the southwest's navy, two arsenals and one airplane factory.

Turkey Given Right to Rearm the Dardanelles

EIGHT signatories to the Lausanne post-war treaty have granted to Turkey the right to remilitarize the Dardanelles, and they, with Turkey, have signed a convention covering the matter. Only Japan made slight reservations because it is no longer a member of the League of Nations.

The convention grants complete liberty to merchant marine passage through the straits in peacetime and wartime, even with Turkey at war, provided the commercial vessels do not assist the fighting powers.

The Russian navy is granted complete freedom in peacetime to leave and enter the Black sea through the straits, but nations outside will be subjected to limitations on passage of fighting ships through the channel.

During wartime belligerents will be prohibited from using the straits unless acting for the league.

Communist Campaign to Open on August 5

NATIONAL campaign headquarters of the Communist party have been opened in New York city and it is announced that Earl Browder, candidate for President, will start his speechmaking in Denver on August 5. From there he goes to Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle, Butte, Bismarck and Minneapolis. All his speeches will be broadcast.

James W. Ford, colored, the Communist party's candidate for vice president, will open his tour August 5 with an appearance in Scranton, Pa.

Attempt to Kill King Edward of England

THE attempted assassination of King Edward VIII of England in London brought great alarm to the English speaking world. The attempt was made near Hyde Park and the monarch's life was saved by a woman bystander who grappled with the would-be assassin and wrested a pistol from him.

King Edward

The king was returning to Buckingham palace from Hyde Park, where on horseback he had presented new colors to six battalions of the Grenadier, Coldstream and Scots guards.

In Paris, the celebration of France's national holiday, Bastille day, saw the Champs Elysees a scene of rioting with rightists and leftists in combat with each other and the police. The disorders began when leftists were returning from their own parade in the eastern section of the city.

Lewis and Others Are Summoned for Trial

IMMEDIATE splitting of the American Federation of Labor into two rival groups was averted by the action of the Federation's executive council in voting to bring to trial on August 3, the union leaders led by John L. Lewis on charges of "dual unionism." It had been reported earlier that the council had voted to suspend the 12 unions grouped as the Committee for Industrial Unionization.

The council's action was looked upon as a peace move in the crisis that threatens open warfare in the labor movement. It was precipitated by the drive to organize 500,000 workers in the steel industry into one big industrial union by John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers and his followers.

The charges against the Lewis group include "competition as a rival organization with the A. F. of L."; fomenting an insurrection within the Federation; violation of contracts they have entered into with the Federation when granted their charters.

L. P. Ayers Predicts Big Business Improvement

PREDICTING 1936 will be the best business year since 1930 and "possibly since 1929," Colonel Leonard P. Ayers, economist of Cleveland, declared that statistics on all important business had shown substantial and "healthy increases" since the first of this year. Strikes, drouth and other difficulties have not affected increases in employment, markets and security exchanges, the economist said.

"More steel has been produced in the first half of 1936 than in all 1932," he pointed out. "A major factor in the increased steadiness of business has been well sustained employment among the factory workers making durable goods. Workers in the durable goods factories suffer most from lay-offs and shut-downs, but such has not been the case in the first half of this year and of last year."

Henry Ford Has Vision Concerning Foods

HENRY FORD, approaching his seventy-third birthday envisioned the eventual decline of farm animals as a source of the world's food and predicted that grains and other crops will largely be substituted for them.

Henry Ford

"We can, I believe, get a more plentiful supply of food cheaper and better," he said, "by processing the products of the soil instead of asking cows and chickens to do it for us. In the future farm animals of all kinds will decline in numbers. We won't need them."

Army to Get Many New Fast Fighting Planes

PERFECTED plans of the War department for procurement of airplanes provide for the acquisition of 60 new fast fighting planes every month during the rest of this year. This has been made possible by the smooth functioning of a new purchasing plan started by Harry H. Woodring, assistant secretary of war.

Before the end of the year, 500 new planes will be ready for action, officials said. Plans have been made for the purchase of more than 600 planes of various types in 1937.

THIS WEEK

Descend Among Bicycles
Many Strikes and Worries
Two Flags That Clash
Two National Hymns

This column, like others to follow, written in Europe, traveling about by automobile, will represent an effort to see things clearly, and describe them simply, according to the old formula.

Arthur Brisbane

You descend from the ship at Havre into a world on wheels, bicycle wheels, a change from the world on automobile wheels left on the other side of the Atlantic.

Here working men and women, thousands of them, ride to and from work, ten to thirty abreast, depending on the width of the street.

They have the right of way, properly, in a democracy.

So it used to be in America, when automobiles were new, small boys shouted "Get a horse," and New York state law compelled the automobile driver to stop his car and engine, while a farm wagon passed, if the farmer raised his hand, or even lead the farm team past his machine if the farmer requested it. Here the car stops, while bicycles circulate around it on both sides. Similarly, you stop, later, meeting flocks of sheep, on roads across the salt marshes of the Vendee.

France is a land of bicycles, of many political parties, and, at the moment, a land of strikes. Like all other European countries, it is a land of permanent war scares. America looks upon war as a distant, improbable possibility, and when it comes spends billions on airships that do not fly, ships that never go to sea, and similar evidences of patriotic dollar-a-year efficiency. Europe's nations live in a state of fear, as an American family might live if it knew that, at any moment, well-equipped gangsters from next door might enter, "shoot up" the household and set fire to the house.

---

American travelers leaving the boat by railroad, descending in Paris at the Saint Lazare station, were surprised to find crowds fighting each other, not waiting for Germany, crowds made up entirely of Frenchmen of different political opinions.

Some wore ribbons with the red, white and blue colors of the French flag; others, more numerous, wore the plain color red. One side sang the "Marseillaise," national hymn of France since the revolution.

Others wearing small red flags sang the "Internationale," official song of the Communists the world over, from Moscow to Harlem. Crowds grew bigger, the Frenchmen sang the two hymns at each other, more and more violently, with excellent voices, not one out of tune, all knowing the words of their respective hymns. The "Marseillaise" says, "Let us go, children of the fatherland, the day of glory has arrived"; the other says, "Arise ye prisoners of starvation; arise, ye wretched of the earth."

---

It was a scene never to be described, now that Dooley is dead and Artemus Ward. Nobody bothered the descending foreigners from across the water. A few Frenchmen hit other Frenchmen, not hard, then agents of the Surete, whom we should call policemen, gradually dispersed the crowds, that met and sang at each other again the next day. They live in the suburbs and work in Paris, or vice versa, and, meeting in the railroad station, it enrages them to encounter those that sing the wrong hymn and wear the wrong colors.

---

Those singers have chests like drums, complexions that reveal countless billions of red corpuscles and voices that could be heard, almost, from Los Angeles to Santa Monica.

One of them broke off at the sad word "starvation" and said to your narrator, who had politely congratulated him on his vigor: "Tenez, tatez mon bras, et j'ai soixante sept ans"—meaning, "Here, feel my muscle, and I am sixty-seven years old."

The muscle rose in a biceps like a small melon.

The duty of a visiting foreigner is to observe, describe and not comment; but this writer, had he accepted the invitation to speak at the American club in Paris recently, would have suggested that the French, whose only earthly possession is France, should be careful not to tear that property apart, especially with Germany ready to gather up the pieces.

---

This crosses the water by mail, is not new, and not news, when you see it. Only heaven knows what might happen in a week.

Pressure Cooking Method of Home Canning Is Meeting With Favor

High Heat Insures Easier Destruction of Harmful Bacteria.

The pressure cooker method of home canning has become a universal favorite with thousands of homemakers. It is recommended by the United States government as well as prominent authorities in home-canning, for the canning of non-acid foods, because of the higher degree of heat obtainable with a pressure cooker, which insures easier destruction of harmful bacteria.

Let us consider the important steps in canning by this method:

The careful homemaker lines up all of her equipment first. Jars are carefully inspected to see that there are no nicks, cracks or sharp edges, then thoroughly cleansed in hot water.

Select fresh, firm (not overripe) products. Grade according to size and ripeness.

Prepare according to recipe.

Pack product into clean jars to not more than one-half inch from top.

Add liquid:

(a) Fruits: Hot water to within 1-2 inch of top of jar, or syrup to within 1 1-2 inches of top of jar. (Syrup expands during processing.)

(b) Vegetables: Hot water to within 1-2 inch of top of jar (salt or other seasoning may be added).

(c) Other products: Follow instructions given in recipe.

Wipe top of jar free from all seeds, pulp, grease, etc., with a clean damp cloth. Also wipe threads and neck of jar clean so as to prevent sticky screw bands which are hard to remove.

If using the "self-sealing" type of jar, place sterilized lid on jar with sealing composition next to glass and screw band firmly tight, or as tight as you can screw the band without using undue exertion or wrenches.

If using rubber ring jars, adjust rubber ring, screw cap down tight, and reverse one-fourth turn, or if using glass top jars; place the upper bail in position across the lid and leave lower bail up.

Place the rack on the bottom of the cooker and add enough hot water to bring it up to the level of the rack (about 2 cups.)

Place the filled jars in the cooker. Prepare only enough jars at one time to fill your cooker. Do not allow jars to touch.

Place the cover in position and tighten according to instructions received with your cooker.

Place cooker on stove and leave the petcock open until a jet of steam has been spurting from the petcock for 7 to 10 minutes (according to size of cooker). Then close the petcock and watch pressure gauge.

Start counting processing time from the minute the required pounds of pressure are indicated on the gauge. Keep the pressure uniform throughout the processing period. Do not allow the pressure to fluctuate as pressure changes will draw liquid out of the jars and prevent accurate computation of processing time.

Process for required length of time according to pressure cooker timetable. When processed for the required length of time remove cooker from fire. Do not open petcock or attempt to remove cover until indicator on steam pressure gauge returns to zero.

Remove jars from cooker and set on several thicknesses of cloth to cool.

Do not tighten screw bands on the "self-sealing" type, but set right side up to cool. If using rubber ring jars, screw cap down tight immediately. To complete seal on wire clamp glass top jars, push lower bail down against neck of jar.

To test the "self-sealing" jars for seal, when jars are cold take a teaspoon and gently tap the lids. If properly sealed they will give a clear ringing note and be slightly concave (curved inwardly) caused by the vacuum inside. If not properly sealed, the sound will be dull and low in key, in which case you have an opportunity to re-can contents and thus save your food.

Cosmic Radiation Helps Stars Send Light to the Earth

Tiny Particles Produce Changes in Stellar Bodies

WASHINGTON.—Cosmic rays and other sorts of fast-flying atomic particles which are shooting continually about the universe between the stars, planets and galaxies may explain many of the mysteries of astronomy, it is suggested in a scientific report published by the National Academy of Sciences here.

Dr. Fritz Zwicky, California Institute of Technology physicist, points out in the proceedings of the academy that cosmic rays may be responsible for some of the light received from giant stars and that the rays also produce forces sufficiently great to cause—in the course of time—astronomical changes. So far, Doctor Zwicky intimates, only the terrestrial aspects of cosmic rays have been studied by scientists.

Cosmic Rays Busy

Cosmic rays, the California scientist states, may be expected to be scattering continually the clouds of gas molecules which are thought to be the first step in the formation of a new galaxy of stars. Gravity is the force which tends to build up these clouds of molecules.

Thus, contends Doctor Zwicky, astronomers may some day need to consider cosmic rays as an additional force acting when they construct their astronomical hypotheses.

No corner of interstellar space escapes these tiny bullets. Wherever they hit matter they break up atoms, and wherever atoms are dismembered light is emitted when the pieces come together again.

Source Is Unknown

The faint glow of the sky on clear moonless nights is partly due to this unceasing rain of high speed particles. Likewise, says the California scientist, the luminosity of comet tails, certain interstellar gas clouds, and outer atmospheres of giant stars, may be due in some measure to this cosmic bombardment.

No one knows, as yet, just where cosmic rays come from or how they acquire their enormous energy. Some kind of super-thunderstorm in stars may create them. In any case they form a sort of contact between different stars and galaxies.

Actual material substance in the form of speeding atoms, ions, and electrons, are shot out from one stellar body and absorbed by another. Professor Zwicky points out that this dissemination of matter and energy throughout the universe "may play an essential role in the evolution of stars and galaxies."

Robot Balloons May Be Weather Forecasters

WASHINGTON.—Little robot balloons rising high into the stratosphere and sending back to earth automatic short-wave radio signals are the latest possible aids to knowing what the weather will be two weeks in the future.

Dr. C. G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian institution, Washington, known for his studies on solar variations, told scientists here recently that more accurate and more continuous day-to-day observations of solar radiation will allow forecasting of some features of the weather two weeks in advance.

For the new method of weather forecasting an extension of the present solar radiation observations of the Smithsonian institution will be needed. At present, there are three observatories on high mountain peaks in desert regions. If financial support can be obtained for adding seven observatories to those now operating, the necessary weather forecasting information will be obtained.

Nation's 1935 Fire Loss Near $260,000,000 Mark

ATLANTIC CITY.—The fire loss of the nation for 1935 was $260,000,000, it is revealed in preliminary estimates made at the meeting of the National Fire Protection association here. This is the smallest loss by fire since 1910 and $16,500,000 less than in 1934.

Since September, 1935, it was indicated, the fire losses per month have gradually been increased, bearing out previous predictions that increased business activities would bring fire loss.

Test Tube "Doubles" for Living Body in Medical Study

Tissue Is Kept Alive Long Time in Glass Jar

THE lifeless test tube has finally become an adequate substitute for the living body at the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research, at least for purposes of certain scientific studies.

Whole pieces of tissue from adult bodies, instead of cells or bits of embryos, can now, for the first time, be made to live on for long periods and to function normally in a glass jar just as they do in the body.

How this long-attempted scientific feat has been accomplished is described by Dr. Raymond C. Parker of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research in New York, in a report to the journal, Science.

Offers Big Field.

This method of keeping adult tissue alive and functioning in a glass flask is expected to "provide a means of studying a great variety of physiological problems that could not be approached" by other means. Doctor Parker and Dr. K. Landsteiner, the Rockefeller scientist whose researches on blood groups won him the Nobel prize, have already succeeded by this method in studying the formation in these tissue bits of the important disease-fighting substances known as antibodies.

Another noted Rockefeller institute scientist, Dr. Alexis Carrel, long ago succeeded in keeping living tissue alive outside the body and other scientists have done so since then. Doctor Carrel played a part in the research reported by designing the peculiarly shaped flask that substitutes for the body in these latest experiments.

Use Adult Bodies.

Life in the test tube reported, however, differs in certain important respects from that achieved by other methods. The famous chicken heart tissue which Doctor Carrel has kept alive for 24 years, for example, did not come from an adult body, but from an unborn embryo. The test tube life of this famous tissue and of others similarly cultured have not been natural ones. Instead of just existing and performing its natural functions, Doctor Carrel's chicken heart has kept on growing, new cells being formed apparently indefinitely.

The bits of tissue kept alive by Doctor Parker's method were taken from the spleen of adult animals. They do not grow, they just live, as tissue in a grown person's body lives without growing. "Functional survival" is the term used by Doctor Parker to describe this existence of the tissue in his flasks.

Miner Embarrassed When Big Elephant Tumbles Down Shaft

MONTREAL.—Mining in the jungle has its peculiar, often rather heavy, embarrassments. There is, for example, the case of a British mining-engineer friend of Dr. Frank D. Adams, emeritus professor of geology at McGill university.

This engineer runs a tin mine in Malaya, just below the Siamese boundary. His miners, Chinese workmen, have been considerably bothered, because an uncommonly huge crocodile swam up the creek to their settlement, and at the same time a leopard has been snarling and stealing livestock from the land side.

Then one night an elephant wandered into camp and fell down the mine shaft. The fall killed him, of course. Only, the engineer wrote to Doctor Adams, he didn't quite know what to do about it.

Aerial Camera Discloses Land Evading Taxes

ROCHESTER, N. Y.—A tip for tax-harassed towns and cities was presented by Lieut. O. S. Reading, United States Coast and Geodetic survey, in explaining the advantages of aerial surveying before the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science here recently.

"How little detailed knowledge we have about land and resources," said Lieutenant Reading, "is indicated by tax equalization surveys of some fourteen cities in Connecticut made with the aid of aerial photographs."

"These disclosed so much unrecorded property that the tax rate was lowered an average of 29 per cent, the grand list increased an average of 47 per cent and the cities lifted out of financial difficulties."

Three-quarters of the whole United States, Lieutenant Reading pointed out, is ineffectually mapped.

Hello Everybody!

"The Bundle on the Boat"

By FLOYD GIBBONS
Famous Headline Hunter.

IT'S a strange and gruesome story I'm going to tell you today—about as old a tale as ever a man ran across in the course of his day's work. Anthony A. Maffe of Elizabeth, N. J., is the man to whom this adventure happened and it's just about the most ticklish piece of business he ever engaged in in his whole life.

Curiosity got him into it. That's a trait most adventurers have. They say curiosity killed a cat once. Well—I'll bet it's killed a heck of a lot of people, too. People who started to look into something that looked a bit strange and found it to be not only strange, but dangerous.

That's what happened to Tony Maffe. Tony was working as a quartermaster on a ferry boat that runs between Staten Island and Elizabethport when, on June 10, 1923, his curiosity was aroused by one of the passengers. That curiosity almost cost him his life. As a matter of fact, it did cost one man his life. But that wasn't any of Tony's fault. He only did his duty.

It was about a quarter of eleven at night. The ferry was docked on the Staten Island side, waiting for the trolley car that would bring another load of passengers. Tony was standing on the upper deck, waiting for the signal to get going. Down by the ferry gates a taxi pulled up to a stop, and he watched it idly as a man got out and began unloading a heavy, awkward looking bundle.

Furtive Filipino's Bundle Arouses Tony's Suspicions.

Tony's interest quickened when he saw that bundle. It was a huge package, and from the way the man carried it, it must have weighed a hundred pounds or more. Then, too, there was something furtive about the man that carried it. He was a Filipino, judging from his appearance, and there was a look of apprehension—of slyness—on his pinched face as he paid the driver and moved toward the ticket office.

Tony had a hunch that something was wrong with that guy, and, on the spur of the moment, he decided to investigate. He ran down the stairs to the lower deck, walked ashore and went into the ticket office. He got there just as the man reached the window, walked up behind him and took a closer look at his package. There was a spot of blood on it!

Still, Tony couldn't swear there was anything wrong with that bundle. It might contain nothing more damning than a hundred pounds or so of meat from a butcher shop.

That would account for the spot of blood. Wouldn't he look foolish if he made a fuss and then that package turned out to be nothing more than a bunch of beefsteaks for some restaurant across the river? No—Tony couldn't prove anything. But just the same, he determined to keep his eye on Mr. Filipino.

Stranger Is Carrying a Wrapped-up Body.

As the man boarded the boat, Tony followed. Going through the ladies' cabin, he moved up behind him and felt the package. His fingers closed on something round. He couldn't be sure of it, but it seemed to him that the round object had hair on it. "Anyway," says Tony, "I knew darn well it wasn't a cabbage or a coconut. I went up to the captain and told him what I thought—that that fellow had a wrapped-up body that he was getting ready to throw overboard."

The captain told Tony to go back and watch that bird, and he himself phoned for the police. By the time Tony got down on deck again, the Filipino had the bundle on the rail, waiting for his chance to toss it into the river.

"I'd rather have waited until the police came," he says, "but there wasn't time. The Filipino was beginning to look nervous, and I was afraid he'd throw the bundle over the side without waiting for the boat to get under way. So I walked slowly over to the rail at a point a few feet away and began edging toward him."

Davey Jones' Locker Loomed for Tony.

A foot at a time, Tony moved up on his man. He didn't dare be in too much of a hurry about it, lest the man notice him and drop his bundle. The water was deep at that spot, and if the bundle was weighted, it might take a lot of diving to get it up again. On the other hand, if it weren't weighted, it might float away in the darkness and never be found.

He edged up until he was within a foot of the man. Then he reached out, grasped the package and pulled it off the railing. In the next instant, the Filipino turned on Tony. He bent low, grabbed him around the knees, and lifted him off his feet.

In a flash, Tony saw his game—to throw him overboard as well as the package. He let out a yell and grabbed at the railing. He caught it—gave a kick or two, and managed to free himself of the Filipino's clutches.

Cops Find It Was a Case of Jealous Murder.

Then, just as the police came running out through the door from the ladies' cabin, he caught the Filipino, put a hammerlock on him, and held him.

The cops opened up that package and found—just what Tony thought they would. It was a woman's body, doubled up like a jackknife and tied with ropes. Her body was still warm.

Tony was a witness at the Filipino's trial—a trial that sent him to the chair. There he got the story of the gruesome tragedy. The Filipino and the girl were servants in the same house. The Filipino had given the girl a diamond engagement ring and the girl, breaking the engagement, had refused to give it back. In a fit of anger, the Filipino killed the girl, and he was trying to get rid of the body when Tony caught him.

Years Soften Sorrow

The sure years reveal the deep remedial force that underlies all sorrowful facts. Crushing losses, which at the time seemed nothing but privation, later assume a different aspect. The breaking up of an occupation or a home allows the formation of others more friendly to the true growth of character, constrains the reception of new influences, hitherto untasted; and he or she who would have remained a sunny garden-flower with no room for its roots, and too much sunshine for its head, by the falling of the walls and the neglect of the gardener is made a banyan of the forest, yielding shade and fruit to wide neighborhoods of men.—Emerson.

Old Scottish Custom

When harvesting time came in Scotland the prettiest girl among the workers on the harvest field was chosen to cut the last sheaf of corn and to decorate it. She was known as the "Hairst Queen," harvest queen. She had to carry the sheaf to the farmhouse to the accompaniment of bagpipes and fiddles, where the sheaf was hung from the rafters in the kitchen and a dance took place in its honor. Sometimes Ceres, the goddess of corn, was represented as a doll. The Hairst queen having cut the final handful of corn would tie it up with ribbons and deck it out in honor of the god dess

MOLTING HENS CUT OUT LAYING EGGS

Birds Go on Eating, Running Up the Expenses.

By Roy S. Dearstyne, Head North Carolina State College Poultry Department.
WNU Service.

Early molting hens, which begin to drop their feathers in the early summer, are not worth keeping in good poultry flocks.

These birds stop laying when they begin to molt, but they go right on eating feed and running up expenses.

They do not lay as many eggs as late molters and the eggs they do lay are produced at a time when eggs are plentiful and prices are low.

Since early molting is an inheritable characteristic, they will pass this trait on to their offspring if left in the flock and used for breeding purposes.

In hot weather, it is especially important that only infertile eggs be produced for home consumption or marketing, as they have a much greater keeping quality than fertile eggs.

Except in the breeding season, roosters should be kept away from the hens. And only the best roosters, those with the ability to transmit good qualities to their offspring, should be kept for breeding.

If eggs are collected several times a day during the summer, and stored immediately in a cool place, they will keep much better. Wire baskets which permit air to circulate freely among the eggs are ideal for the storage room.

But even under ideal conditions, eggs should not be kept in storage any longer than necessary. A poultryman who gets a reputation of marketing only fresh eggs can command good prices.

Lice and mites propagate rapidly in hot weather. Infested birds soon lose their vigor and fall off in egg production. Poultrymen should examine their birds every few days so they can check infestations as soon as they start.

Select Cockerels Early, Is Urged by a Poultryman

Make an early start in selecting males to be used as breeders for next year's poultry flock. During the early growth period it is possible to obtain information on feather development, growth rate, vigor and standard qualities.

This is the suggestion of Dr. N. F. Waters of the poultry husbandry staff at Iowa State college. The male is extremely important to the flock, Dr. Waters points out, since he exerts an influence on the progeny of approximately 15 female birds.

If a poultryman decides that he will need ten cockerels for the following breeding season, he should start his selection when the birds are about eight weeks old. In selecting these ten males Dr. Waters recommends that about 40 of the best birds be selected from the flock. During the next three or four months a careful selection and culling should be made from these 40 males until the ten best remain.

Rations for Cockerels

A ration suitable for fattening cockerels would be equal parts corn meal, barley, meal, shorts and ground oats, with about 10 per cent beef meal added. The important thing is to feed them what they will eat up clean and keep their appetite good. Give them all the water they will drink and see that grit is before them at all times. The cockerels should be fed in small pens or better in fattening crates if for marketing. The mash should be moistened with sour skim milk or buttermilk; allow it to thicken. If the mash is mixed with the moisture about two hours before feeding, it will swell and be more easily digested. Never leave any feed in the trough, either in pen or crate feeding, after the birds have satisfied their appetite.

Rations for Young Ducks

Young ducks will thrive on common grains fed either whole or mixed and ground to a coarse meal. They will do best when most of their feed is made into a moist mash. They should have cabbage or other similar green feed and meat scrap or table scrap, provided these are perfectly fresh and fed in moderation. In summer ducks will find most of their feed if near water but may need some supplemental rations.

Treatment for Lice

Hot weather is the time that lice do most of their damage. An early battle against them may easily prevent a slump in egg production. The easiest and least expensive treatment for lice, says Wallaces' Farmer, is the use of nicotine sulphate on the roosts just before the hens perch for the night. A needle-like stream, applied the length of each roost is effective and very low in cost. It will rid the laying flock of most of the lice.

All Around the House

Grease the measuring cup before measuring sirup or molasses and the ingredients will not stick to the sides of the cup and there will be no waste.

Always sweep rugs and carpets the way of the grain. Brushing against the grain roughens the surface and it tends to brush the dust in instead of out.

Partly cook cereal in a double boiler the night before using and leave it on the back of the stove, being sure to cover well with water. It will be well cooked in the morning.

Four pounds of plums will make five pint jars of preserves.

Glass stoppers may be easily removed from bottles if a towel is dipped into boiling water and wrapped around the neck of bottle for a few minutes.

Since the steel industry has its company unions, there is a conviction in many quarters that Mr. Lewis might well pause to consider whether this is the time to carry forward his program of bringing steel workers under national labor union control. There are those who believe that the company unions eventually will become units in the larger labor structure of the country and, if that be true, it is made to appear that Mr. Lewis has hurt labor's cause.

On the other hand, the steel industry already is under attack by the government. Mr. Roosevelt suddenly "cracked down" on some of the major companies recently, charging them with collusion in bids on government work. He came out with this charge at a time which undoubtedly will stiffen the backbone of the union agitators—and it is not unlikely that by the same token he has stiffened the resistance which the steel companies will use.

Yet, it does seem that the steel companies made a fatal mistake in the pronouncement they have issued. There are too many people who will be inclined to believe that the steel companies have taken advantage of an apparent assurance of collapse of federal supervision There are few who believe that the federal compulsory collective bargaining statute will last very long but the fact that this statute is due for the discard, it sems to me, hardly warrants the action which the steel companies nave taken. They are no more warranted in that than union labor is warranted in taking advantage of the political situation to feather their own nest. A real danger, in addition to this, is that Communist agitators are going to use this situation as one vehicle for spreading their propaganda of dissatisfaction and discontent and Mr Roosevelt's attack on massed capital unfortunately lends itself to the nefarious schemes of the Reds.

It long has been said that the method of administering laws frequently has created more dissatisfaction among the citizens than the requirements of laws themselves. Tax laws of whatever kind furnish a splendid example. It has always been true since we have had income tax laws that taxpayers have complained more about bureaucratic regulation, indecision, lack of uniformity in administration and, generally speaking, slow processes of settlement than about the amount they were required to pay. The same is true about our customs laws despite the fact that they affect fewer persons directly.

Tax Law Irritation

The other day the Treasury issued a notice to customs inspectors that was "effective immediately." It was a change in policy respecting the quantity of goods an individual may bring in from foreign shores without the payment of the customs tax.

Since 1798 or thereabouts, there has been a law which permitted a returning American to bring in commodities of whatever kind he desired, except narcotics, up to $100 in value but that law permitted the Treasury to make exceptions. The Treasury notice the other day was an announcement of an exception to this $100 exemption. It said that no inbound traveler could carry more than one wine gallon of liquor without the payment of the customs tax thereon. A practice had sprung up since the import duty on liquors has been made so high of returning tourists bringing in almost the full exemption in liquor alone. Probably the practice was getting very bad and no one questions the judgment of the Treasury in determining policy. But it is the method employed in making this change that has aroused criticism.

In ordering the new regulation "effective immediately," the Treasury forced upon hundreds of travelers the necessity for paying duty on their personal stocks of liquor in what amounts to a surprise order. They had left foreign shores under one regulation and arrive under another.

I have no doubt at all that the Treasury's reason for changing the rule while the game was being played will result in a considerable amount of revenue for the government. But there are many who believe, as I do, that the department in all fairness should have issued its regulation to become effective at some fixed date in the future in order that citizens who must comply with it would be prepared by proper notification of what they were expected to do and the penalties for failure to obey.

The incident to which I have referred is an outstanding example of inconsideration and such things always cause citizens to have a hurt feeling, a feeling that the government changed the rules without consulting those who must obey the rules.

"The Man Who·O·O"

Tales and Traditions from American Political History

BY FRANK E. HAGEN AND ELMO SCOTT WATSON

DARK HORSE

WITH President Roosevelt's renomination by the Democrats a certainty for a long time and the selection of Governor Landon strongly indicated for several months before the Republican convention met, this wasn't a year for "dark horses." A "dark horse" is American political slang applied to a man who is not generally mentioned as a candidate previous to a convention but who wins the nomination when the delegates fail to agree on one of the leading candidates.

The phrase started as English racing slang, originating in the practice by jockeys of dyeing black the hair of fast horses in order to enter them in races under another name and thereby being able to "clean up" in the betting. Gradually the use of the term was extended to apply to any horse, regardless of its color, which won unexpectedly and similarly it was applied to candidates for public office

American political history affords a number of examples of dark horses capturing the Presidential nomination but only a very few of them have gone on to occupy the White House. In 1844 James K. Polk of Tennessee won the Democratic nomination at Baltimore when there was a deadlock between ex-President Martin Van Buren, and Lewis Cass. In the election he defeated Henry Clay, the Whig, and became the first "dark horse" President.

Again in 1852 the Democrats assembled in Baltimore and again Lewis Cass was a leading candidate with James Buchanan and Stephen A. Douglas furnishing the principal competition for the nomination. But again there was a deadlock and when the tide turned toward Franklin Pierce, again there was a stampede and this "dark horse" from New Hampshire was nominated. In the election he defeated the Whig candidate, Gen. Winfield Scott.

As for the Republicans in 1876 they passed up their strongest man, James G. Blaine of Maine, and his principal opponent, O. P. Morton of Indiana, and gave the nomination to Gov. R. B. Hayes, Ohio's "favorite son." who defeated Samuel Tilden, the Democratic candidate.

In 1880 they turned down Ex-President Grant's bid for a third term, again passed over Blaine, failed to rally to John Sherman of Ohio, another strong contender, and finally selected another Buckeye "dark horse"—Gen. James A. Garfield. The most recent Republican "dark horse" to win the nomination and election was still another Ohioan—Sen. Warren G. Harding, who was chosen after the Lowden and Wood deadlock at the Chicago convention of 1920 had been tied up in a deadlock between Gen. Leonard Wood and Gov. Frank O. Lowden of Illinois.

G. O. P.

PERHAPS you never heard of a young printer named T. B. Dowden, but he was the man who was responsible for G. O. P. being synonymous for the Republican party. It came about in this way:

In 1884, the year that the Republicans finally nominated James G. Blaine for the Presidency, young Dowden applied for work at the Cincinnati Gazette and got it. About 2:30 o'clock one morning, just before the Gazette went to press, Dowden took from the copy hook a piece of copy marked "Must go in ten lines." He began setting it in type and, as he finished, found himself in difficulty.

"My copy ends with 'Grand Old Party' and I have two words left over after I've set the ten lines," he told the foreman of the shop, "What shall I do?"

"Throw 'em away and use your intelligence!" exclaimed the foreman impatiently. "No, wait cut 'em short . . . get 'em in some way! Abbreviate 'em. . . . use initials . . . do anything, but hurry up. This page is going to be late!"

So Dowden went back to his case and the next morning the Gazette came out with this sentence on the front page: "The Hon. James G. Blaine will address the meeting on 'Achievements of the GOP.'"

At the meeting that night the Republican candidate was concluding a two-hour speech when a voice floated down from the gallery: "Why don't you tell us something about GOP and what it did?"

"Why, my friend," retorted Blaine, "I've been talking about GOP all evening. The word GOP contains the initial letters of the Grand Old Party and that is its official and abbreviated name."

The audience roared with laughter but Blaine didn't crack a smile. He little realized that he had given currency to an expression which would become a familiar trademark to millions—a trademark attached to a major political party by a hurried young printer named T. B. Dowden.
